Helen Holmes Does 186th Dive Off Overhanging Cliff

Helen Holmes, America's foremost stunt girl, who hesitates at nothing no matter how hazardous it may be, performed her one hundred and eighty-sixth dive from a cliff during the filming of "Blood and Steel" which will be shown today only at Sherrys theatre.

No horse is too wild for Helen Holmes to ride, no water is too treacherous for her to swim. The story of "Blood and Steel" called for a spectacular high dive from an overhanging cliff, into the creek below. J. P. McGowan, director of the film offered to get someone to do the trick for Miss Holmes. She would not hear of it, and by the time the camera had been set she was at the topmost peak waiting for the signal to go.

It is little wonder that spectators get a genuine thrill out of scenes like this, but the thrill the audience gets is nothing compared to the sensation that Miss Holmes and the entire company is treated to every time she undertakes some new and more difficult feat.

Comedy showing "Love Birds."

Actor Pilots Doomed Ship and Averts Wreck

House Peters recently played the role of hero—not a screen hero but a real, honest-to-goodness hero. It came during the making of "The Storm Breaker," Universal Jewel production starring Peters and which will be seen starting Friday, at the Star theatre. Fourty-five men probably owe their lives to the star's knowledge of practical navigation when he prevented a sailing vessel from being rammed by a freighter.

The incident happened off San Pedro, California, when thirty-five members of the Universal Company — players, cameramen, director and others and ten seamen were aboard a sailing vessel that had been chartered by Universal Pictures Corporation for a short sequence in "The Storm Breaker." The schooner had just passed beyond the breakwater and the regular crew were below decks so as to be out of camera shot.

The actors were at their posts with Peters at the helm. All was going well when suddenly from less than 200 feet off their port bow, loomed the snub nose of a heavy inward bound freighter that had come poking out of a fog bank. She was headed directly for the sailing vessel. Peters thought and acted quickly. He threw the helm over and the freighter slipped by. The heavy boat barely missed grazing the lighter craft as it passed on into port. It is one thrill that the picture will not show.

"The Storm Breaker" is a great story of the sea, of seafaring men and of their women folk on a little rock-bound island off the coast of Nova Scotia. It is from Charles Guernon's story of the same name. Peters has been cast in a most interesting role—a domineering man who fears nothing in earth or in heaven and who believes that everything comes to him, by the strength of his will and arms.

The players supporting the star are excellent. They include Nina Romano, Ruth Clifford, Ray Hallor, Jere Austin, Mark Fenton, Gertrude Claire, William J. Colvin, Lon Poff, Lionel Belmore and Ed. Brown.

Colleen Moore at Arcade Theater In New Thriller

Pitched against gorgeous, glowing canvases, such as would do credit to any salon, "We Moderns" new First National offering starring the sprightly Colleen Moore, proves one of the most colorful and intriguing yaurs ever told in the screen at the Arcade theatre, where it is being shown today and Thursday.

London furnishes the background for the action—a constant, awe-inspiring panorama of historic piles and phibsances. And through it all hops, skips and jumps Colleen in pursuit of the plot, or being pursued by it, until in an effective final scene she comes down to earth, figuratively and literally.

For Colleen, bluest of the Blue Bohémians, a chaotic contortionistic set of "modernists," so-called because they are against everything that represents form and precedent, is in the midst of a wild party aboard a Zeppelin when that aerial conveyance itself decides to be old-fashioned and become settled. It had been rammed by an airplane, and as the helium gas escapes and it plunges earthward the blase Bohemians are less blase and Colleen sees her associates in their true colors—which are not to be dubbed "true blue."

All in all, it's an exciting play, and none of Colleen's fans—as well as any others, if there are any—should miss it.

Another real treat is the Gang comedy that is being shown in conjunction with the Colleen Moore feature.
