SAYS JAZZ IS TIMELY SPIRIT

BERLIN, (AP)—A critic through his jazz, its rhythm, and its modern dance has found the proper expression for the spirit of modern times better than any other nation, in the opinion of Max Reinhardt.

That John Barrymore is the greatest American actor, Jeanne Eagels and Lenore Ulric top-notch actresses, and Bill Goodie, a veritable genius in depicting stage scenery, were further opinions voiced to The Associated Press by the noted German stage director.

Hamlet in full evening dress and Shylock in bathing trunks constitute so much nonsense, said Reinhardt.

"America is on the threshold of a tremendous theatrical future," Reinhardt observed. "There is a yearning, a craving among the best in art such as is equalled in but few countries.

"This yearning, coupled with your American temperament—'pep' to use a slang expression—and with the capacity of your people to absorb new ideas, provides lines America for a leading position in theatrical art.

Elaborating his ideas concerning jazz, Reinhardt explained: "The American feeling for rhythm, as exemplified in jazz, gives better expression to the spirit of our time than any other form of music. Jazz is literally crying for someone to do for it what, for instance, Johann Strauss did for the waltz—give it concrete expression in a manner that will endure through generations."

It is going too far, according to Reinhardt, to produce Hamlet in evening dress suit, or to lay the scene of the "Merchant of Venice" in the fashionable Lido off Venice, with Shylock in bathing trunks, as suggested by one theatre producer. At the same time he is not opposed to the idea of giving a modern setting to old dramas in which the time element is unimportant.

"Remember that the Shakespearean plays themselves were offered in Elizabethan costumes when first produced," he said, "although the scenes were often laid centuries earlier."

"In the course of my work as a stage manager I have often observed that actors made a stronger impression during rehearsals, when they were dressed in their street clothing, than they did afterwards during the performance, when they wore historical costumes."

"I, therefore, believe that modern costumes are often justified in old plays. But of course, everything must be done within reason. Hamlet in full dress is nonsense. Let me add, however, that I regard the whole question of costumes as secondary. The main thing is acting."

Reinhardt has just produced "Rain" here marking his first large venture into the field of interpreting American plays to German audiences.

Seattle Municipal Trolley System to Buy Another Line

SEATTLE, (AP)—Negotiations are under way for the city to buy the last privately owned street car line in its limits. This would provide the city with a total mileage of 250 and would leave Seattle second only to Detroit as a municipal transportation owner.

The Upset of a Little Lamp

The disastrous fire at Chicago in 1871, resulting from a cow upsetting a small lamp, shows how little things grow into enormous proportions.

It was not the kicking over of a lamp that started a little store but it was the little store itself that started a business growing into one of National importance.

The first J. C. Penney Company Store—then known as the Golden Rule Store—transacted less than a $29,000 business the first year. Less than a quarter of century later, we find it with 676 Stores, doing a business of approximately $90,000,000.

That's a reward of service!
