Real Screen Battle Features "Lord Jim."

One of the most terrific battles in the annals of the film industry took place recently sixty-eight miles from Los Angeles between three hundred copper colored savages and a handful of white men.

Headed by Percy Marmont, Noah Berry and Raymond Hatton the contingent of white men decisively defeated an entire army of Malays for scenes of Joseph Conrad's sea story, "Lord Jim," which Victor Fleming directed.

The completion of this battle sequence marked the end of more than five weeks of location work for the filming of the ocean and South Sea Island scenes for the production which comes to the Star theatre on Friday next.

Shirley Mason, in the feminine lead, completes the quartette of featured players.

"Lord Jim" marks the second time in history that a work of Joseph Conrad has been brought to the screen. John Russell, close friend of the late author, made the adaptation. George C. Hull wrote the screen play.

Other big names in the cast include Joe Dowling, George Magrill, Nick de Ruiz, J. Gunnis Davis, Jules Cowles and Duke Kahanamoku, the Olympic swimmer.

Mary Astor and Lloyd Hughes In New Picture

Mary Astor and Lloyd Hughes are the attractions today and Thursday at the Arcade theatre in "The Scarlet Saint"—a First National picture.

"The Scarlet Saint," an adaptation of Gerald Beaumont's magazine story, "The Lady Who Played Fidele," is a pleasing and entertaining picture which has been well directed and one which contains a story that is gripping and really powerful. Above all, whoever selected the cast did an admirable job. It is rarely that a cast so well fitted for their roles comes to the screen.

The picture is built around a situation in which we find a young American girl bethrothed by her father to an Austrian nobleman, but who is madly in love with a handsome young American. Of course, the difficulties of the young couple are eventually solved as they should be, but in the solution an excellent bit of script writing and direction has been done. There are thrills aplenty, tense situations, scenes which draw the tears, scenes which double you up with laughter.

Miss Astor, as the young American girl, wins the sympathy of her audience and holds it. Hughes appears to better advantage than the writer has yet seen him as the handsome young lover of Mary. He is clean-cut and convincing.

Another member of this cast who deserves much praise is Frank Morgan, who plays the part of the Austrian nobleman. Morgan, very happily, seems to have sensed the line across which so many actors step. Jed Prouty, as the excitable and easily swayed father of Miss Astor, is good.

George Archainbaud, who directed "The Scarlet Saint," has done an excellent piece of work and deserves much credit.

"Kiss Me Again" Showing at Sherrys Today

The sad truth that "when you get what you want, you don't want it any more" is the basic theme of "Kiss Me Again" the newest Warner Bros. production that will be featured at the Sherry theatre for two days.

"Kiss Me Again" is the latest vehicle for the directorial genius of the great Ernst Lubitsch, who has contributed more to the progress of screen development than any other director in the industry. Since his arrival in America, about two years ago, he has introduced an entirely new technique in screen production with "The Marriage Circle," his first picture for Warner Bros. He followed this by "Three Women" and now his third effort, "Kiss Me Again" is ready for the public.

Marie Provost, Monte Blue, Clara Bow, John Roche and Willard Louis are the players chosen by Mr. Lubitsch to enact "Kiss Me Again" on the screen. These five favorites constitute the entire cast, which means that the action will be concentrated and well done, if the past performances of Mr. Lubitsch and each of these actors are the criterion.

STUDENTS PAY OWN WAY

OREGON NORMAL SCHOOL, Monmouth. — Statistics compiled by the normal school office show that 72 per cent of the students who have just completed the fall term are wholly or partially self-supporting, 54 per cent being wholly self-supporting. Of the 925 students, 310 are entirely dependent on their own earnings, 158 make a part of their expenses, while 280 are entirely dependent.

A number of the students are able to defray a part of their expenses by work in the normal or in the town. The normal school dormitory furnishes opportunity for work to many girls.

Excavations in the San Francisco Bay region of California show that the Indians of 3,500 years ago had the same customs and lived them as their descendants live today.
