First Civilization Here Established by Asiatics

The structures were habitations during inclement weather only, being mainly utilized as storage and burial places. There seemed to be no individual ownership of the rooms, buildings or the adjacent land.

Specimens dug from the ruins disclose a well-developed artistic sense as expressed in beautifully decorated pottery or weird, grotesque designs not alone in these sandals, baskets and head and breast bands, and on the surfaces of rock and canyon walls which they carved.

Certain of these petroglyphs have a religious or ceremonial meaning and sometimes are duplicated in the modern carvings or paintings of the Pueblo Indians.

When this civilization ceased is not definitely known, but it ended probably 600 years ago. Scientists believe the culture of these Indian inhabitants was wiped out quickly, but are undecided as to whether it was by an upheaval of nature, conquest or the simple scattering of the clans to other regions, leaving behind a silent record for the archaeologist to explore.

HARDING APPROVES VOISG

SALEM, Ore.—Governor Pierce took exception to the criticisms of ex-Governor West in connection with the type of horse upon which Roosevelt is mounted on the statue of the city of Portland by Dr. Henry Waldo Coe.

"I spent a great deal of time in the middle in eastern Oregon over a period of more than 40 years," said Governor Pierce, "and I think I have some knowledge of horsemanship. I have not been able to discover anything wrong with the Roosevelt statue and I am of the opinion that the ex-governor's criticism was unwarranted."

Governor Pierce's remark that at the time the late President Harding visited the Pacific coast a few years ago he viewed the Roosevelt statue, and in a subsequent interview, said:

"That is the finest horse in America."

Movie School to Turn Graduates to Pictures

NEW YORK (AP)—A movie school graduation, in which the making of a picture is the test and contracts the diplomas for successful students, will soon be held in New York.

In this unique school the course of study includes the art of kissing before the camera, dancing anything from the classical to the Charleston, pantomime, emotional control, character study, loss of self, camera to camera scenes, swimming, gymnasium exercises, and fencing.

With the growth of the motion picture industry, the need of skilled players became apparent. Famous Players officials conceived the idea of establishing a training school. From 25,000 applicants, 19 were selected. This number was reduced to 10 after three students fell behind the rest of the class, which began work in July.

Completion of the first photograph, tentatively given the title of "Glorious Youth," is near and the acting ability displayed by the students will determine who will be placed on the road to stardom. Marian Ivy Harris of Atlanta, and Charles Rogers of Olathe, Kans., have the leading parts in the film, but each of the other students also has a good role.

"The long hours of training have seemed like play," says the way Miss Iris Grey of Wichita, Kansas, described her opinion of the school. "The work gave us all enormous appetites soon after we started and as a result all of us have been dieting. But what is a little dieting when there is a chance to make good in the movies?"
