This is the first time in years that this is possible. The deer in this section are coming down from the high mountains. They are feeding on the abundant supply of grass and moss on the lower hills near Catherine creek. Miss Ida Hunter returned to her home on Catherine creek after visiting with friends at The Park. Lewis Park, at Coxy, was a business visitor to The Park last week. Mr. and Mrs. Bob Wanker were visitors at the Clarence Vanorder home the first of the week.

FILM CUTTING MONOPOLIZED

NEW YORK. (AP)—Women virtually have a monopoly of one of the most important positions in the motion picture industry—that of script holder and film cutter. In this capacity they serve as assistants to the directors. During the filming of a picture, they help check on the thousands of details relating to the manuscript. When all the scenes have been shot, they superintend the cutting and arrangement of the film, an operation which always plays a big part in the success or failure of a production.

Many times the cutting of a film requires night work and the women generally are known as being among the hardest workers in the industry. Their salaries are better than those received by average actors.

A woman's viewpoint is necessary in the production of a picture. Allan Dwan, James Cruze, Edward Sutherland and other directors pointed out.

Women also have a greater power of concentration and infinitely more patience with minor details, two producers said. Many of the script holders and film cutters have risen from the rank of stenographers and secretaries.

After the negative is cut, it must be cleaned and then printed on positive film by special machines, which in many instances are operated by women. From here, the film goes through many processes until it finally is tested and ready for shipment.

At the Paramount laboratories here alone approximately 75,000,000 feet of film is cut, assembled and printed annually.

FARMER BEARING HEAVY BURDEN, WALLACE AVERS

KANSAS CITY (By the Associated Press)—The agricultural states of the midwest and south are bearing the brunt of a post-war reversal of trade balances between the United States and Europe. H. A. Wallace, Des Moines, Iowa, editor of a farm publication, testified here Monday before the interstate commerce commission freight rate hearing. Mr. Wallace, who is the son of the late secretary of agriculture, presented an exhibit on behalf of the corn belt committee, representing agricultural organizations in the corn belt states which purported to show that farmers in Iowa, Illinois and Missouri have been receiving for some years an annual return on their investment considerably below the 5% per cent which the commission has announced as a fair return for railroads.

Prior to the world war, Mr. Wallace said, the United States was paying with surplus agricultural products interest amounting to several hundreds of millions of dollars annually on debts contracted in Europe for prosecution of the Civil war. But at the end of the world war, the debt had been cleared up and Europe had become the creditor of America. America, he declared, is testified, because the holder of many promissory obligations. Trade relations stopped and a surplus of farm products accumulated.

"This," said Mr. Wallace, "hits only the midwest and the south—the agricultural areas which produce these surpluses. The east has not realized the force of the blow and the minds of the big industrialists of the east have not been directed toward solution of the problem."
