 Visits Throne Room.
 Our lady chaffeur obtained permission for us to enter the throne room of Iolani palace, once the home of royalty. From its walls hang life size paintings of all the former kings and the late ex-queen Liliokalani.

Of much interest to all visitors is the Bishop Museum with its excellent collection of Polynesian antiquities, including priceless feather capes of long deceased Hawaiian monarchs and other symbols of Hawaiian royalty such as feather hobbles, headresses and tabi stiles. One cape of feathers valued at a million dollars needed the labor of several generations for its completion.

It might tell you about the climate, the flowering trees and shrubs, the tropical fruits, coast of living hotels, residences, transportation facilities, charming Hawaiian costumes, surf riding, sports, quaint Hawaiian legends, sugar and pineapple crops, territorial government and hundreds of things that are different here, but it's all out of the question. One cannot concentrate on anything. It's like pulling teeth to write when you want to sit in your deck chair, feel the salt breeze blow and dream of the wonders you have seen.

Met Forrest Ivanhoe.
 We neglected to tell you we had the great pleasure of a call from Lieutenant Forrest Ivanhoe, formerly of La Grande, at Honolulu, who spent a delightful hour with us before the steamer left the dock.

We celebrated Christmas on the ocean. Christmas eve Santa Claus came down one of the big stacks with a large pack of presents for the children on board. A large decorated Christmas tree was lit and a Christmas program was held especially for the four little children in the party. Christmas morning found all the passengers exchanging cards and presents at the breakfast tables. At 7 o'clock in the evening dinner was served, followed by a dance. It was surely a strange Christmas. We were on the big ocean with not a ship, bit of land or snow in sight. No cold weather, only sunshine. One of the passengers gave the captain a check for one thousand dollars to be divided among the ship's crew. A collection of $1,500 was taken up from all the passengers to be divided among all the crew who were below the water line.

Attended Buyers Meeting.
 J. J. Carr returned from Portland this morning where he attended a meeting of the Western Buyers association, which is composed of many of the leading retail furniture dealers of Oregon and Southern Washington. Mr. Carr states that the Carr Furniture company has become a member of this association. Members meet every two weeks to exchange ideas and to pool buying. At present the annual buying of the association represents an expenditure of $2,000,000.

In City Today.
 George T. Cochran, grand commander of the Knights Templar of the state, returned home to La Grande this morning after attending a Knights Templar meeting at Baker last evening. Other state officers, M. L. Meyers, of Seaside, and D. R. Cheney, of Portland, returned to La Grande this morning also. They spent the day here with friends and left tonight for their homes in Western Oregon.

To Tour California.
 Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Lilly will leave tomorrow, 10 motor, for California for a stay of six or eight weeks. They expect to tour all along the coast of California and will visit in Los Angeles with friends and former residents of La Grande. Mrs. Elmer Stoddard and Mrs. Charles Reynolds will accompany them as far as Portland.

 white triumph. On the other hand, Baker brings a squad of experienced male boxers who are said to be forging ahead of their longtime rivals at Joseph. Their team includes a number of last year's best men—one of them Claudio Hines, who, despite his color, has made anything but a blot on the Baker school's athletic record.

But La Grande goes into the battle with high hopes and the goal to keep them soaring. The Tigers made a proud showing in their Walla Walla county campaign last week end, and tied Baker's desired vacancy within 40 seconds of the end of the game.

STOCKMEN IN ANNUAL MEET

 The range conditions in this section as well as practically all others, have been considerably improved during the past year, because the grass has been permitted to get a good start and allowed to recuperate to some extent. Louis Carpenter, of the forest service, was present at the meeting.

A curious fact concerning the 57 "deeps" in the ocean is that all of them are near the land.

LARISTAN GOES DOWN
 NEW YORK (By the Associated Press)—Death struck the waves last night and reaped a human harvest, but 12 men were snatched from its grasp by fellow seamen who had repeatedly risked their lives for humanity's sake.

In the worst storm which has raked the Atlantic in years, the British freighter, Laristan, broke up after a two-day battle against the elements and went down with a crew of 25 men. The line, Bremen, which answered the Laristan's S. O. S. call and had stood by in the hope of being able to offer assistance, gave up hope after losing sight of the freighter. The sea was widely strewn with wreckage which the ship's officers assumed was all that was left of the Laristan.

Obituary

JOHN H. OLSON
 BAKER, Ore. (Special)—A short illness brought the earthly career of John H. Olson to a sudden death on Tuesday night when the death called him.

John H. Olson was a mill man in the employ of the Baker White Pine Lumber company in this city and had been for a number of years. He was a native of Norway. He was a widower and is survived by two sons, Edward of La Grande and John of Baker.

The funeral was held at the West chapel this afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. Kibbler officiating.

MRS. GANGLOFF CELEBRATING ANNIVERSARY

 and at first I was afraid," she talks with an amused sympathy for the girl who realized so little of what life was holding in store.

Married Indian War Hero.
 At Olympia she met Augustine Gangloff, a young man who had come to the Oregon territory from the states in 1839, and who had glorified himself in the Indian wars. They were married in 1862, and made their home at Olympia, where the bridegroom had built a thriving nursery business.

Two years later, beguiled by the reports of the promising Grande Ronde valley, the young nurseryman set out with a wagonload of fruit and berry stock that he expected to sell to the Eastern Oregon settlers. He couldn't dispose of all that stock, so he and his settlers hadn't the means to buy—but he looked at the valley and saw a vision of future orchards. And he decided to stay.

Trips Trying Experiences.
 So the next spring he returned to Olympia for his wife and their daughter, still a baby in arms. "That trip was full of trying experiences for me," recalls Mrs. Gangloff. "I had never slept out a night in my life before, and when the settlers were so situated for the night where we stayed, no room for us except in the barn. I was sure that my baby would die, but my husband fixed us a bed in a tent, and we were really as comfortable as could be—although I was afraid all night long that some wild animal or an Indian would come along and kill us."

No La Grande Then.
 "There was no La Grande where La Grande is now. Up on the hill, at what we call 'Old Town,' there was a scattering of homes, and under a group of cedars had built an Ore. Jail. Besides the hotel where we stayed, there were a couple of stores, a mill and a meat shop."

"My husband took over a homestead from a settler who was leaving the valley, and soon he had his nursery business started here. He furnished the trees for all the first orchards in the valley, although most of them are dead now."

The Gangloff home stood west of town on a bit of the land that she has since given to the state as a memorial to the pioneers.

In those days, the valley was a veritable cockle chamber. When camp meetings were going on down at the Prochrest place, near what is now Riverside park, Mrs. Gangloff and her two small daughters could sit on their doorstep more than a mile away and listen to the songs and even distinguish the words of the preachers. The prattle of children came to them plainly from the Harding homestead half a mile from their home.

Visited at Olympia.
 Two or three years later, Mrs. Gangloff went back to Olympia for a visit with her parents. The journey across the mountains lasted eight days, and was made partly by stage, partly by boat, and finally, toward the coast, by rail. She stayed six months through the coldest winter that Olympia has ever known. The bay was frozen way beyond the city, and the weather was so severe that she could hardly go outside.

"The snow piled records for the return trip. When the stage stopped at the halfway house, the horses had to be slid down a long incline to get them into the stables.

Indians Were Fearful.
 When the Gangloffs first came to the valley the trees along the river were only shrubs. The grass, everywhere, was knee-deep—there were no cattle herds then to keep it short. Indians came to dig the ground for potatoes, but they baked for eight or 10 days in a fixed, sack oven, and considered a particular delicacy.

"The Indians never offered to harm us, but I was sometimes greatly frightened when they came to the house while I was alone," Mrs. Gangloff says. "Once three young bucks, on their way home from the wars across the mountains, came to our door, their belts thrust full of knives and pistols,
