"Bringing Up Father" Coming to The Arcade

All hail to the next attraction at the Arcade theater, Thursday night, February 11. None other than that hilarious of all American comedies, "Bringing Up Father in Gay New York." The latest dramatization of the famous comies by George McManus, the identical production that delighted throngs at the Lyric theater, Broadway, New York, and the Olympic theater, Chicago, during its long seasons earlier in the season. In two acts and six scenes the offering more than runs the gamut of unabated laughter, surprises, novelties, sermons and merriment. A sort of cyclone of mirth that starts a-rolling and continues without interruption from curtain to curtain. This time "Father" is the central figure in a series of side-splitting situations and complications with Maggie, the hen-pecking wife, conspicuous in the price-titles as usual.

Reserved seats will go on sale Monday, Feb. 8 at the Glass Drug store.

Tom Meighan Traffic Cop in "Irish Luck"

Taking Tom Donahue at the corner of 13th avenue and Fifty-ninth street on an afternoon in the springtime you would never suspect that this prosaic figure in blue, this burly, broad-shouldered traffic cop was destined for romance and thrilling adventure in a distant land. Tom didn't dream of such a thing himself. Traffic cops have not time for dreams—at 15th avenue and Fifty-ninth street. But along came a daily newspaper and started a voting contest for the most popular policeman in New York city. When the votes were all counted Tom found himself snowed under by an avalanche of popularity ballots, and that wasn't all. First prize carried with it a trip abroad and a $1000 purse.

So it was that Tom Meighan in his new Paramount starring picture, "Irish Luck," which opens a two days run at the Star theater on Sunday. The story is an adaptation by Tom Greaghly of Norman Verner's Saturday Evening Post serial, "An Imperfect Impostor." Victor Heerman, who made "The Confidence Man" and "Old Home Week" directed.

Lola Wilson plays opposite. The lead in a featured role, Cecil Humphreys, Claude King, Charles McDonald and Mary Fox are also in the cast.

Determined to do this story right, Paramount sent a large producing company to Ireland to film "Irish Luck" on the spot. This is the first big picture ever to be made on the old sod. Big scenes include shots on the S. S. Levathan in mid-ocean, modern Dublin, the beautiful lakes of Killarney, antique castles, beautiful countryside.

Picture Thomas Meighan as the Irish-American hero of an altogether pleasing romantic-drama and against such a background—then go to the Star and see it!

"The Splendid Crime" Is Newest Bebe Daniels Film

The Arcade theater will have an exceptionally fine film attraction Monday only, when William de Mille's latest production, "The Splendid Crime," starring Bebe

Bebe Daniels makes its local debut. For those who enjoy a sparkling crook comedy-drama, laid against a contrasting gloom and society background, flavored with romance and rich in humor and pathos, this photoplay will fill the bill from soup to nuts.

The story, written by Mr. de Mille himself, centers about a droll little girl crook, effectively portrayed by Miss Daniels, whose father, an amusing old rascal, is responsible for her burglarious tendencies. It finally occurs to her that "housebreaking" ain't no work for a lady but she is forced to postpone her reformation because her father and his crook companion need her help in pulling off just one more job.

As all luck would have it, Bebe is caught by the owner whose home she enters without an invitation, but he turns out to be a grateful, happy-go-lucky millionaire, who turns her loose when she promises to go straight. How she becomes a dressmaker's apprentice, her romance with the society chap and the "splendid crime" form the largest and most exciting part of the picture.

Neil Hamilton is happily cast as the millionaire who loses his money and is tempted to turn crooked. Dividing principal honors with him are Anne Cornwall, as his flapper-sister and Anthony Jovett as her boy friend.

Life, Love, Laughs In New Hart Film At Sherrys

When the government, in 1889, decided to open the Cherokee Land Strip to homesteaders, it meant the end of the cattlemen's regime. They had leased grazing lands and ranch slices on the strip from the Cherokees, but now they had to go with their vast herds. No wonder there was bitterness between the owners and hands.

This is the basis of "Tumbleweeds," William S. Hart's first production for United Artists Corporation release, which comes to the Sherry theater Sunday and in it the true tale of the famous strip between Kansas and Oklahoma is told for the first time on the screen.

Prior to the great rush for homesteads, when thousands of persons were camped on the borders of the strip waiting the signal to go, Don Carver, a range boss, having homesteaded, capitulates to a pretty girl among the invading army and decides to stake a claim himself.

He is confronted, however, with the rascality of her half-brother and of a rival for her affections, who obtains his arrest as a "seaman" (one who tried to grab a claim before the opening). But he escapes, gets the site which controls the water, and wallops his enemies.

This is the story of a girl who winds up among the invading army and decides to stake a claim herself. He is confronted, however, with the rascality of her half-brother and of a rival for her affections, who obtains his arrest as a "seaman" (one who tried to grab a claim before the opening). But he escapes, gets the site which controls the water, and wallops his enemies.

There are great cattle ranch scenes which entailed distant locations in making the picture, which King Dungan directed. There are great street scenes representing Chicago, Kans., which became a metropolitan center when the homesteaders entered; wonderful shots of the human rush and many intimate and beautiful effects of the rolling prairies. The old dance hall and gambling days again came to life in Caldwell for a brief period and these are depicted with fidelity. And throughout runs a tender strain of love, and of human sweetness of character under primitive conditions.

Barbara Bedford, one of screen-drama's most beautiful actresses, plays Molly Lassiter, the girl for whom Don Carver, the "Tumbleweed" played by Bill Hart, con-

Performing Raccoons Head Vaudeville Bill for Sunday

A versatile collection of novel surprises and two headline attractions with plenty of good comedy will be seen, voiced night at the Arcade theater on Sunday.

Maudie Fox and Pats featuring Teddy and Tony, performing raccoons, presents a real novelty and novel act wherein dogs and raccoons, known to be deadly enemies, work together in perfect harmony. Originality is the keynote and it is the only offering of its kind in vaudeville. Williams and Lee in "A Bowl of Trebles" will do comedy sketches, ground and left, ground, line, giving many a thrill to the spectator who has the pleasure of witnessing the antics of this clever duo. Myre and Myre, "Promoters of Laughs," having combined their talents, offer one of the most amusing situations in vaudeville, full of funny situations, singing and eccentric dancing. Hyland, Grant and Hyland, the popular versatile trio of singers and dancers who have originated, "The men are smother with their harmony feet while the girl adds a novelty to the offering, Bob Grace as "The King's Jester," has ability and will be popular. He sings, talks, dances and does all of them cleverly. Comedy that brings spontaneous laughter—crowds almost every line.

A new appliance discharges laughing gas through the exhaust of an auto so as to change the resentment of pedestrians to harmless mirth.

A radio expert seems to be a man who changes to another station just as soon as he learns what he has.
