Sister Mary Says:

(By Sister Mary)

Breakfast — Grapes, cereal, thin cream, sour cream waffles, straws, milk, coffee.

Luncheon — Creamed noodles and mushrooms, brown bread, masked bread pudding, milk, tea.

Dinner — Stuffed baked halibut, twice baked potatoes, buttered beets, orange salad, floating island, graham bread, milk, tea.

A "party" dish of some sort is always needed when fish is served. In this instance the salad supplies this need.

The beets are chosen as much for their contrasting color with the fish as for their food. However, you will find that this color contrast is very dependable for the making of well-balanced menus.

Masked Bread Pudding

Two cups dry graham bread crumbs, 1/2 cup sugar, 2 tablespoons butter, 1-2 cup jam or preserves, 1/2 cup whipping cream.

Melt butter and add to bread crumbs and sugar. Mix thoroughly. Line a baking dish with waxed paper and pack mixture firmly in dish. Bake in a moderate oven until solid and top is brown. It will take about 20 minutes. Remove from oven and turn dish upside down on serving platter. Pull off paper. When ready to serve spread with jam and mask with cream whipped and slightly sweetened and flavored with vanilla.

The pudding can be served hot or cold, but I like it just comfortably warm.

Broadway Play as Theaters Decline "Risqué"

LONDON (AP).—A Broadway play has been broadcast with great success to the British listening-in public—not one of his long talking plays, but a bit of footloose Shaw wrote for a theatrical garden party 20 years ago.

"Tashton, Poins and Petrification" is the title of the extravaganza. When the heroine, Lady Magenta, is asked by her maid, "Why do you not undress, get into bed and end all this hubbub?" She replies, in distressed tones: "How can I, Phyllis, with all these people listening."

It is said to be the only Shaw play that has never been produced in America. Not even the Theater Guild will risk its reputation on it.

"This, indeed, is a pleasant surprise"
—and it usually is to every woman who first tries it.

THE woman who finds real joy in cake making finds a still greater joy the first day she begins to use Mazola for shortening.

Perfect results: a better grained—a lighter—a richer cake—all assured with using Mazola for shortening.

Merely follow your own favorite recipe—using 1/2 to 1/3 less Mazola if the recipe mentions butter—no tiresome creaming in—no expensive butter—yet a cake so delicious that it will indeed be a pleasant surprise.

Mazola, as you may know, is an absolutely pure vegetable oil—made from the hearts of full-ripened corn kernels—and is itself as good to eat as the corn from which it comes.

We suggest a cake recipe below—please try it—and we believe that you, like millions of other progressive housewives, will always prefer Mazola to expensive butter.

POUND CAKE

1 Cup Sugar 8 Teaspoons Baking Powder
1/2 Cup Mazola 1/2 Cup Milk
1 1/2 Cup Sifted Pastry Flour 4 Eggs
1/2 Teaspoon Salt 1 Teaspoon Lemon Flavoring

BEAT together yolks of eggs, sugar and one tablespoon milk taken from amount given in recipe. Add Mazola gradually, beating constantly, until light and creamy. Fold in sifted dry ingredients alternately with milk. Cut and fold in stiffly beaten whites of eggs and add flavoring. Bake in a loaf in moderate oven about 85 to 90 minutes. Line pan with oil paper.
