MAN'S PRIVILEGE—And Moses came and called for the elders of the people, and laid before their faces all these words which the Lord commanded him. And all the people answered * * * All that the Lord hath spoken we will do.—Ex. 12:7-8.

One way to overcome being sensitive is to realize how unimportant we really are.

Extremes always invite extremes. When a man gets tight his mouth gets loose.

It isn't arrogance that makes car drivers into bullies, but the possibility of a quick get-away. We note that most of us do the loudest talking after we are a block or two beyond the cop who balled us out.

If we might all see ourselves as others see us, we wonder if the practice of changing the color of one's hair, of using brilliant paint, of dressing to extremes, and of overdoing the appearance generally would be resorted to as promiscuously as it now is? We are not familiar with the practice of beauty shops but it seems that they could be of great service to their patrons and to society in general if they would prescribe moderation in such things. People weren't intended to look like scarecrows but appearances indicate that it can be done if desired.

LEGISLATING TO MAKE PEOPLE GOOD.

Christ violated 450 local Sunday observance laws which the scribes had heaped upon the fourth commandment. Jesus never founded his religion on such a law as is here proposed (the Lankford bill). He made his religion inspirational, not legalistic. And the preacher today who makes the police club and not the cross of Calvary his symbol is not fit to be a preacher.—The Rev. C. S. Langens, representing the Seventy-Day Adventists of the United States at the congressional hearing on the Lankford bill.

The above quotation is worthy of consideration of all who would, by legislative means, correct our morals and make us more ideal Christians. If people are doing many things that are not good for them—and no one will question the occasional lack of right living by the average citizen—if those things are not now in the list of crimes before the law, then we can accomplish very little by putting them there. The arm of the law can keep murder and burglary and vice at a minimum. It might make Sunday movies, baseball games and motor trips criminal experiences. But it wouldn't make any better the people whom the church seeks most to reach and to serve. It wouldn't make church attendance any more attractive nor Bible reading any more interesting.

If the majority of the people in a community do not want Sunday amusements, then they can readily impose their will on the minority and have the amusements abolished. But if the majority are not so disposed, legislation will not make them so. If the religious organizations fostering this bill before congress would devote their efforts to the education of a majority of our citizenship to the advantages of Sunday observance, its benefits to the mind and to the body, its place and importance in the scheme of better living, some permanent good might be accomplished. These days it seems we are prone to say too frequently that someone "must" or "mustn't" instead of "should" or "shouldn't," followed by logical reasons why the conduct advised is more beneficial. Not all of us, perhaps, are of mature minds, neither are we always amenable to reason; yet, if anyone is to have the greatest influence in shaping our lives, it must be one who first assumes that we have reasonable intelligence and minds of our own. We prefer and even insist on being lead, not driven—a condition that is overlooked by some of those seeking passage of a Sunday observance law.

WHY MOTHERS GET GRAY

Two problems the women didn't have fifteen years ago were cigarette strains on their fingers and clapped knees.

She—If ever I marry, it will be a man whose income has at least four eighths in it.

He—That's good, dear. My income is all eighths—as many as you like.

"That blamed dog," he grumbled, "has been scratching at the door to get in for the last hour, but he runs away every time I open it."

"That ain't the dog," she explained; "that's the hired man writin' a letter on the kitchen table."

She (panting)—"Some day I'll find my ideal, a man who won't try to take advantage of me."

He—"Yeah, but the tombstone will probably be too heavy to lift."

The young man getting married these days should be sure that he can pay the attorney to which the young lady has been accustomed.

"What's this?" said the school teacher. "The people of Boston are stupid? Why, the idea!"

"Well, the book says here that Massachusetts is remarkable for its very dense population."

Freddie—"Ma, didn't the missionary say that the savages didn't wear any clothes?"

Mother—"Yes, dear."

Freddie—"Then, why did papa put a button in the collection plate?"

NOBLE TURNS SOVJET.

MOSCOW, Mar. 8. (AP)—Of the few members of the old nobility who have joined the Bolshevik forces the most notable perhaps is Prince Valerian Obolensky whose family dates back to the time of the Norseman Rurik, the first ruler of Russia.

Forbidding his family and former connections Prince Obolensky adopted the name of Obolensky and was appointed soviet ambassador to Sweden. He now is a full-fledged member of the council of the people's commissary and manager of the state statistical department.

Farm Pointers

Cheap seeds ruin the best laid garden plans. Cheap seeds are expensive, says A. L. Peck, professor of landscape gardening at Oregon Agricultural college, no matter what the price. It is seed buying time now, and the use of good seed is one of the surest ways of obtaining good crops.

If Oregon farmers had the mature heap from around the dairy barn on the land before warm weather comes, it will improve the conditions around the barn, notes the experiment station. Manure serves as a breeding place for flies and its removal makes conditions more sanitary for milk production.

Tomato, cabbage and cauliflower seeds are now being started in Oregon greenhouses and hot beds. Radishes and lettuce started in heat now, and replanting as they are removed, will provide these for the table for a great length of time, says A. G. Bouquet, professor of vegetable gardening at the college.

Field peas which require early planting, have given good results when planted in March. Varieties recommended for western Oregon are, White Caballero Blue, Wisconsin and Arthur. Any of these varieties grown with oats or barley has been found to make a good hay or silage. Where field peas are being planted for the first time it is important that they be inoculated, says the experiment station. Material for inoculation of field peas may be obtained from the Oregon Agricultural college.

Four thousand doses of vaccine for the cure or prevention of hemorrhagic septicemia in sheep have been sent out by the department of bacteriology. Nearly all the districts raising sheep have sent in for vaccine, the largest number of notices being from Klamath county.

"The results obtained have been exceedingly satisfactory," said C. V. Carson, professor of bacteriology. "One person after having

Alice Worthington Is Wolf's Only Heiress

CHICAGO, Mar. 8. (AP)—Alice Worthington, daughter of John W. Worthington, the "wolf of LaSalle street" who died in the federal prison at Atlanta last Tuesday, told the Chicago Tribune that reports of her father leaving a $3,000,000 estate were untrue.

She said she had the only will her father made and she is given the entire estate which she said amounted to about $250,000. She added that she will contest any other will produced.

ADVERTISING FOR GIRLS

ERKISHERR, Turkey—A young man's social group is advertising for girls to act as dance partners for pay, because the new freedom for women is taking hold so slowly that the men have to dance with chairs or each other.
