

Coolidge Speaks Before Pan-American Congress

President Urges Frequent Gatherings of North and South American Journalists.

WASHINGTON, Apr. 8. (AP)—President Coolidge, in addressing today the first Pan-American congress of journalists which assembled at the Pan American Union, urged that the gatherings be held frequently as a means of drawing together the peoples of the western hemisphere.

Speaking of the increased interchange of news among the American nations in recent years, Mr. Coolidge declared this awakening of interest had been "one of the most important factors in bringing about a better understanding" of the several countries.

"I venture the prediction," he added, "that as a result of this congress the papers in the United States in the future will present more complete and more accurate pictures of the cultural and industrial progress of Latin America, and that the press of those republics will give to their readers a better understanding of the ideas and purposes of the United States."

"If all our citizens here do not yet realize fully that Latin America is as progressive as the United States; and if some Latin Americans, as I have been told is the case, are prone to feel that this country is interested in material things alone, I am sure it may be explained by the lack of that knowledge which comes from personal contact through travel and by the mutual inadequacy of news reports of the significant facts and developments in the respective countries."

WASHINGTON, Apr. 8. (AP)—With President Coolidge as the principal speaker the first Pan-American Congress of Journalists was embarked upon a quest of studying the various problems confronting the press of the 21 republics represented with a view to working for a better understanding among their nations.

A report by Dr. Jorge A. Mitró of La Nación, Buenos Aires, on "The Press and International Relations," provided the basis for the first actual work of the congress. Greater interchange of news, development of a Pan-American art center in New York and encouragement of the sports tournament embracing the hemisphere were suggested in the report as means of bringing about closer understanding among the nations of the two countries.

The president of the United States and spokesmen for the houses of North and South America will take part later today in the laying of the corner stone of the $10,000,000 building which is to be erected here as a home for the National Press club. The National character of the club typified through the participation of president Coolidge and of editors and publishers from all parts of the country, and its broader aspects as a Washington center for newspapermen of all countries will be emphasized by the attendance of Latin-American delegates here for the Pan-American congress of Journalists.
