Early Types of Ships Shown in "Rocking Moon"

California, the golden state and the home of the motion picture industry, depended almost entirely upon the ingenuity of Alaskans in its early days.

All the mission bells which rang out over the mesas and ranches of early California were cast and finished in Alaska and shipped in Alaskan ships to California.

Long before the days of the first gold rush to California, native Indians and Russian priests moulded the forms for the mission bells and laid the keels for the first ships that were to bring the bells to California.

Some of these early type of ships as well as the crude weapons of commerce and agriculture, can be seen in the motion picture "Rocking Moon" at Sherrys.

Barrett Willoughby, author of "Rocking Moon," herself an Alaskan, wrote the story which presents a new Alaskan to the screen.

Where the blue fox farming industry is fast becoming one of the leading industries—where there is sunshine and flowers a-plenty, and where this virgin country was filmed for the first time in this strong production.

There are many interesting facts which make "Rocking Moon" a delightful innovation. The adherence to detail, the proper selection of players, the use of genuine Indian and Russian dance masks and blankets, all of which were loaned by the Sitka Museum to Metropolitan Pictures Corporation for use in the film.

"Rocking Moon" has received the unqualified indorsement of many government officials of Alaska. Elyan Tashman, John Hovers, Rockcliffe Fellows, Laakka Winter, Luke Cosgrave, Eugene Pallette and Evelyn Selbie have excellent roles.

"Police Patrol" Coming to Star Tuesday

Day and night silently watching, ever alert is "The Police Patrol." It is the most impressive symbol of modern civilization—it is the Law. To the average person, the good natured "cop" on the beat is taken for granted but how many ever stop to consider what life in a large or even a small city, would be without "The Police Patrol."

One minute the man in blue is good naturedly chatting to the grocery man at the corner and the next moment he may be clinging to the reins of a maddened runaway horse. Five minutes after he bids you a cheery "good night" he may be exchanging bullets with some midnight marauder. It's all in the day's work for a cop.

Such is the background of "The Police Patrol" the new Gotham Photoplay which comes to the Star Theater Tuesday and Wednesday. Depicting the many trials in pursuit of his duty, this stirring photoplay concentrates in a brief hour or so the most thrilling events of a policeman's exciting career.

The leading roles are enacted by a cast of real stellar caliber with James Kirkwood in the stellar part of Jim Ryan, one of New York's "finest." Mr. Kirkwood is supported by Edna Murphy who has the most difficult part role of the heroine and a famous "hobbed hand" handle, Edmund Bresse, Bradley Barker, Morya Andree and other well known players enact this midnight melodrama or Manhattan which was staged under the supervision of officials of the New York Police Department.

He has been active in the development of the state of Oregon and has served four terms in the Senate from 1907 to 1917, and was a member of the State Senate in 1924.

He was President of the Oregon Irrigation Congress for two terms and is the only candidate who understands the irrigation problems of Eastern Oregon.

He is a young, vigorous, capable man.

In 1921 he was the floor leader of the "ethical fourteen" Senators who defeated the attempt to tax the farmers of Oregon for the purpose of holding a world's fair.

He has always stood by the agricultural interests of the state. He voted against the Mills bill in 1925 and he saved the direct primary.

If you believe in the direct primary law, vote for J. H. Upton. If you believe in the old convention system, then vote for his opponent.
