Brodman's business depends on an order from the wealthy Durant, the gay one. He is worried—"but the wife's away," says Brodman, "and I've got to have the order."

The problem of obtaining "friends" was a greater one for the strict old gentleman. He might ask his son for help, but this young gentleman was not on speaking terms with dad, due to an unreciprocated marriage with some girl whom his parents refused to meet. But Daisy, Brodman's secretary, said one of the "friends." The old gentleman jumps at this unlooked-for help.

And then the fun began! Durant's wife insists on going along. To save his face, Brodman introduces Daisy to Mrs. Durant, as his better half's jewelry and some evening clothes. So when Mrs. Brodman unexpectedly returns—!

It is all amazingly mixed up, with a ripping climax at the end and the most unexpected results in the world, making this picture first-rate entertainment. You'll bust over the swift rush of real comedy situations.

"Desert Gold" Now Running At The Star

What is this man Zane Grey's secret? He never seems to run out of ideas. Each picture bearing his name is always a bit better than the one which preceded it. All this sounds like mighty high praise for Paramount's latest and greatest western, "Desert Gold," which opened to enthusiastic audiences at the Star theater last evening. But, that's what it's intended to be. "Desert Gold" is a fine film.

It has all the elements which go to make for popular appeal. Shirley Mason was never seen to better advantage than as Mercedes, the sweetheart of Neil Hamilton. William Powell makes an interesting bandit, and Robert Frazer as the man who wins the girl in the end, does his best with a role that fits him like the well known glove.

While this perfect story of stiving credit is in progress, let us be fair and include the names of three men, who are truly deserving of it. First, you are referred to George Seltz, the director. He has done a masterful job. Then there is Lucien Hubbard, scenarist of this, "The Vanishing American," and many others. And finally, C. Edgar Schoenbaum, the cameraman. Some of the most exquisite and exciting shots ever seen are included in "Desert Gold."

To mention just a few things at random—audiences will thrill at the scenes taken out in the desert on the "Slope of Death." It is a place where the ground is continually shifting, and huge rocks are crashing down the hillside. These ominous projectiles provide a thrilling background for part of the dramatic action.

Then there is the fight in the town Casita, during which Hamilton and Miss Mason try to escape. Frazer starts the whole thing by first throwing a man who is molesting Shirley over the banister of a balcony. Not content with this, he enters the barroom and before anyone knows what is going on, knocks the lamp over.

These are just two single instances of what is meant by action. "Desert Gold" has speed, zip, and romance every foot of the way.

"Desert Gold" and a two-reel comedy will be shown again at the Star theater today and Saturday.

Columbia Comedy, "Steppin' Out" At Sherrys

A celebrated critic recently announced that when the moving picture needed was not more elaborate films, but lighter, happier and more sparkling dramatic stories.

Columbia has done its best to supply this need with their latest feature, "Steppin' Out," now at Sherrys. "Steppin' Out" is a fast, frothy comedy of night life along the gay white way. Surrounding this main theme are a hundred amusing complications.

The plot deals with the efforts of a "gay dog" from the West to paint the town red, without, of course, the assistance of friend wife. To do this thoroughly, he first sends a note to a business acquaintance of his, Brodman, a very cautious old gentleman, telling him to get a couple of "friends for the evening."

Brodman's business depends on an order from the wealthy Durant, the gay one. He is worried—"but the wife's away," says Brodman, "and I've got to have the order."

The problem of obtaining "friends" was a greater one for the strict old gentleman. And then the fun began! Durant's wife insists on going along. To save his face, Brodman introduces Daisy to Mrs. Durant, as his better half's jewelry and some evening clothes. So when Mrs. Brodman unexpectedly returns—!
