"Iron Horse" Filming Took Many Months

While the first transcontinental railroad was under construction in 1865, General Sherman, back from his march through Atlanta to the sea, remarked of the railway: "I should be unwilling to buy a ticket over it for my grandchildren." In five years, he rode over the line with General Grenville M. Dodge who was construction engineer of the Union Pacific.

In the William Fox picture of this stirring period in American history, "The Iron Horse," which opened a four day engagement at the Arcade theater today, Walter Rodgers plays the role of General Dodge, the friend of track layers and the enemy of bad Indians. The picture presents the colorful life with vivid realism, most of its incidents being based on actual facts of history.

Fox research workers found in their work of gathering data, the statement of William M. Thayer, in his "Marvels of the New West," to the effect that: "The construction of the Union Pacific across the continent was the greatest marvel of our age. The consummation of the enterprise settled the high destiny of the New West. From that moment all things began to be new. Progress was wonderful, and now it sweeps on more grandly than ever."

Continuing with his account, Mr. Thayer wrote: "The road was completed in three years, six months and ten days. Two hundred and sixty-five miles were built in 1868; 285 in 1867 and the remainder finished on May 10, 1869. Strangely enough, the picture itself required three years in the making, with John Ford directing a huge cast on the open prairie of Nevada and Wyoming.

PROMISE PERSONALS

PROMISE (Special)—Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Blackford and daughter Verne, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lindsey and Mr. Sinky came here from La Grande Saturday evening and visited with C. P. Carper and L. K. McDonald. They returned home Sunday evening.

Miss Marie Larm, of Wallowa, will teach next year in the Riverside school. Miss Eunice Courtney, of Troy, will teach the Promise school.

Roy Carper, who was injured recently while riding a horse to Sunday school, is staying with his sister Mrs. Frank Lindsey in La Grande while he is recovering. He was badly bruised but no bones were broken.

Will Reed and John Carper took the bait box to Enterprises returning home Saturday.

Miss Eunice Courtney, of Troy,

Last Showing of "The Fighting Edge" This Evening

Henry Lehman has been eminently successful in packing action into this story of romance and smuggling along the Mexican border. The picture opens with a very exciting chase after some smugglers and the wreck of their car as it plunges down a mountainside. Then we are introduced to the heroine, who in order to get into the smugglers' mysterious ranch house, purposely dashes her car down a cliff and then feigns unconsciousness. Once we are in the ranch house, there is tense suspense as both hero and heroine seek to locate a missing federal agent. Things happen in swift succession, and in a battle royal, their man! However the smugglers still have fight in them and they pursue the trio to a deserted house where the climax comes with more "free for all" mixups. Kenneth Harlan has a colorful role as Juan O'Rourke, Spanish-Irish secret service man. Patsy Ruth Miller, who is co-starred, is also good.

Comedy showing "Defective Detectives."

"Thunder," The Marvel Dog in his latest and what is claimed to be his greatest picture, "His Master's Voice," is the leading attraction listed for the Star theater Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The locale of his Gotham production is a small town in the middle West at the start of the story which is then transferred to the front line trenches "somewhere in France." The basic theme of the story is how the bravery and faithfulness of a dog enables a moral and physical coward to work out his own redemption.

The production was directed by Renaud Hoffman and is said to be the last word in realism. "His Master's Voice" is the third picture in which "Thunder" has been starred and the mental development of this fine animal is remarkable.

An unusually fine cast of favorite film players enact the leading roles with Mary Carr, the famous mother of the screen, George Backthorne and Marjorie Daw at the head of the list.

The story of "His Master's Voice" was written for the screen by Frank Foster Davis, owner and trainer of "Thunder," consequently the acting of the police dog is of the highest standard. The picture of Gotham production and "His Master's Voice" as the greatest dog picture ever made. The public can judge for themselves on this point Thursday when "His Master's Voice" is shown here.

LONGVIEW where rail, water and highway meet

LONGVIEW, Washington—three years old—has physical advantages enjoyed by very few cities and also many advantages other cities have striven years to obtain. Consider transportation: On the Columbia River halfway between Portland and the Pacific—the ocean only fifty miles away, served by Northern Pacific, Union Pacific and Great Northern; docks accommodate the largest ocean freighters; two finest paved highways—Pacific Highway and Columbia River Highway. Ocean Beach Highway, now building, will give a second highway connection with the ocean. Certainly, Longview is remarkable as to transportation and location, as well as climate and opportunities. visited at the Poulson place Saturday evening. Thirty young people honored her with a surprise party during her visit. Mrs. Poulson and Mrs. Smith served tea, cream and cake. Sunday Miss Courtney visited at the C. P. Carper place, leaving Monday for Maxville. There she was to meet Mr. and Mrs. Hill Eads, of Alder River and go with them to Portland. She will also visit in La Grande while away.

Neighbors and friends of Mrs. Nellie Piesman met Monday and put up half a mile of fence for her. Those who did the work were Boyd, John and Charles Carper, Ula Poulson, Harvey McDonald, Rimer Bennett, Vesper Henderson, Mr. Gerbest, Andrew Piesman, Fred Trump, W. I. Samar, Obe McCarty, Mrs. Piesman, Mrs. Phillips, Mrs. Reed and Mrs. Poulson served dinner for the workers. Mr. and Mrs. Reed visited Sunday at the home of Boyd Carper. Mrs. Phillips is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Prudence Carper. Ula Poulson, Mr. Gerbest and Duane and Mr. Henderson left
