ost breakfast of fish he had ever eaten. They had him about a week before they left him.

He went on down the creek and before he knew it ran into a small cabin. The cabin was built of puncheons split out and laid on each other. Back of the cabin was a small piece of ground spaded and planted in radishes and turnips. From the appearance it was done by a white man who had deserted his cabin, nothing suited him better than to stay there awhile. This was a place west of Union and on the creek. He stayed there and harvested the garden and decided to make his home there. He knew it would not be long before the valley would be settled as it was on the route to the Idaho mines. One night he turned out his horses and the next morning found out they were gone and looking around found their trail and started out on foot, following them he went into the Wallowa valley coming upon five or six Indians and several thousand head of horses and so considered it best to give up the chase.

About July 1, Tom Lagerwood and Dan Waldo came into the country with the first herd of horses and settled between Union and the depot. In the fall, John Parton and Dick Robinson came to from the Willamette valley with cattle but did not locate any ranches. While this was going on, people came in and settled along the edge of the valley, the upper end of the valley, between Hot Lake and Cove was a vast lake covered with tules and was called Tule lake. The whole valley was covered with rye and bunch grass. Only the people who had seen it could appreciate its beauty.

In the fall of 1862, he left the cabin which he found and had located a claim, which afterward formed a part of Union, which is now west of Union. Several months after Fred Nodine had settled this valley, a man named Conrad Miller came here driving an ox team. Coming to the end stopped at the cabin that Nodine had settled and prepared to unload. Meanwhile Corbin, Clark and Hinkley had taken up the claim and were in possession of it. They told Miller he was not going to have possession of the land but after Miller told them his story, they thought they had better give it up. In those days there were no courts in this part of the country, and Union county was a part of Wasco and the county seat was The Dalles. As Nodine was the only party in this neighborhood that was not

Sister Mary Says:

(By Sister Mary)

Breakfast—Orange juice, cereal cooked with dates, crisp granham toast, milk, coffee.

Luncheon—Rice croquettes with cheese sauce, lettuce sandwiches, drop nut cookies, milk, tea.

Dinner—Baked cottage ham, potatoes, spinach, cucumber salad, whole wheat bread, puff white cake, berries, milk, coffee.

A cottage ham usually weighs from two to four pounds and contains no bone. In choosing one of these hams select one that is firm to the touch if fat is not liked. A piece that "gives" when pressed will have streaks of fat through it, while one that is firm will have solid meat with little fat.

Rice Croquettes With Cheese Sauce

One-half cup rice, 1/4 cup boiling water, 1/4 cup milk, 2 tablespoons cream, 1 egg, 3 tablespoons pimientos (minced optional), 1/2 teaspoon salt.

Wash and pick over rice. Cover with cold water and let stand overnight. In the morning drain and put into double boiler. Add boiling water and cook over hot water until rice has absorbed water. Add milk and cook over hot water until rice has absorbed milk. Add cream, egg slightly beaten, pimientos, salt and a few grains of pepper. Spread on a platter to cool. Shape, roll in crumbs, dip in egg slightly beaten and roll again in crumbs. Fry in deep fat hot enough to brown an inch cube of bread in 40 seconds. Drain on brown paper and serve with cheese sauce.

To make the sauce, melt 2 tablespoons butter in a smooth sauce pan. Stir in 2 tablespoons flour and slowly add 1 1/2 cups milk, stirring constantly. Bring to the boiling point and season with 1/2 teaspoon salt and 1/4 teaspoon paprika. Add 1/2 cup finely chopped cheese. Stir until cheese is melted. More cheese can be used if preferred, up to 1 cup.

Interested in the affair he was called on to settle it.

He held court at the disputed cabin under a halm tree and heard the testimony of both sides. Miller said in the fall of 1861, he entered the valley alone and had come up to this end of the valley. Here he had picked out the claim which suited him best and built the cabin and spaded up a place in the back and planted radishes and turnips. Later on, he left, deciding on coming back, he had gone up to Vancouver and all had gone well until he came to the John Day river and couldn't cross. He quit the attempt until in the fall. The other party's story was simple, they had found the land unoccupied and settled there. He decided that Miller was entitled to the property. Miller started the first nursery which consisted of mostly apple trees and a few pear

A clean and healthy skin is always charming, but the usual home methods of treatment are not often adequate.
