Lesson Miss Cooley gave

the first thing this morning on making new hats from old. With a table piled with really disreputable and no-longer-wearable headgear, she demonstrated carefully the best methods for dyeing, altering and remodeling.

Pages carried the finished dishes to the audience who admired the quick-turned artistry and audibly determined to try making them.

Mrs. McClean's menu was carried out all in yellow and white and was served in china of the same cool-toned pattern, with a centerpiece of yellow daisies and baby's breath.

"Your family looks at your table more than any other part of your home, so if you want them to cultivate a taste for color, let your table be a beautiful picture."

The lecturer, with her background of practical experience, was able to pass many helpful hints that the home economics teacher might not have considered. For how should a college instructor have learned that an egg-leathering baby could be managed with cream puffs and custards, or that a thoughtful wife always gives a pre-showing of the dish her husband is to serve?

Tomorrow at 2 o'clock, Mrs. McClean will demonstrate the family luncheon.

For her menu, she will use the following:

Greeny Omelet with Peas Orzo, Tea Biscuit

2 eggs, 1 cup medium white sauce, 1 can peas, Beat egg yolks. Add 1/2 cup white sauce. Fold in beaten whites. Cook in buttered frying pan over a slow fire till browned on bottom. Place the pan in a slow oven for 5 minutes to set the top. Remove from oven. Run a spatula around edge and underneath the omelet. Make a slight crease through the center of the omelet. Fold the omelet by tipping the pan. Serve at once with the creamed peas.

Orange Tea Biscuit

To baking powder biscuit dough made in the usual way add grated orange peel. Soak small cubes of sugar in orange juice. Press a soaked cube of sugar on top of each biscuit. Bake.

Costs of treating grain are also heavy.
