OUT OUR WAY

AT THE THEATERS

"The Speed Limit"
To Show at Arcade Wednesday

The leading attraction at the Arcade theater on Wednesday is "The Speed Limit," and we wish to state that it is all of that. Seldom has the screen of the Arcade theater reflected a more snappy or lively comedy-drama than this new Gotham Production.

The producers in the instance have selected youthful players who enter into the spirit of the thing and the result is one of the most pleasant screen hours seen in some time.

The story is all about automobiles, love and gasoline. Mix those three ingredients in the right proportion and you have a picture that is the speed limit.

Raymond McKee heads the cast of the young fire inventor who, despite all obstacles of his rivals, lack of finance and being in love, puts his tires on the map, or rather the track—and when he does, things certainly move. McKee himself moves at the rate of over a hundred miles an hour in the most thrilling auto race seen in many months.

George Chapman and James Conroy, a Jewish and a colored boy, furnish a large share of the comedy and the scene where the colored boy and his buddy sweet-talk the balcony seats from Romeo and Juliet, is one of the screen's comic classics.

"Bucking the Truth," Mystery Western,
Comes to Star

For 100 per cent flawless entertainment, see "Bucking the Truth," the Universal Blue-Strick Western starring Pete Morrison, which is playing at the star theater today and Wednesday.

It presents novel, satisfying entertainment and diversion in large chunks. Another western, you say? It is a western, but so different as to be truly startling.

It has a highly original and startling mystery plot, dealing with a murder, the solution of the baffling mixup remains unsolved until the very end of the picture.

It has Pete Morrison, the "Fairbanks of westerns" with the winning and engaging personality, his scintillating smile and his feat of daring and skill. It has action galore. Some thrilling fights, some headlock riding and some delicious comedy.

Morrison, as the innocent hero who unwittingly throws suspicion of the murder upon himself, and has to spend the next five reels proving that he didn't do it, gives an excellent performance. His characterization is not that of the typical screen cowboy. Rather he is a human, realistic character, such as one might find in any of a half dozen western states.

"Bucking the Truth" was directed by Milburn Morante, from an original screen story and continuity by Jay Iman Kane. It was filmed for Universal release by Lariat Productions.

The supporting cast includes Lou Reed, Brimley Shaw, Bruce Gordon, Charles Whitaker, Charles Lattache, Orwald Robertson, Victor Pegg and others.

An Andy Gump comedy is also being shown.

More millions for prohibition. Our coal line is a cost line.

Last Showing of Lefty Flynn Picture Is Tonight.

Chalk up another smashing success to the credit of Lefty Flynn, recent graduate from the western movie school.

The rangy star's latest vehicle, "High And Handsome," was shown on the screen at the Sherry theater yesterday, and it proved one of the fastest and strongest comedy-dramas turned out of Hollywood in recent months. A fine cast interprets the action, and Lefty himself has never been seen to such advantage as "Officer Hanrahan," the lovable, human, and self-sacrificing patrolman who beats up a heavyweight champion, not because he is his apparently superior rival, but because he hits the girl that Officer Hanrahan loves. There is kick, punch, laughter and tears in every scene in which this unusual police hero appears.

Pulling Leather a Sin
Cowboys Won't Tolerate

PENDLETON, Ore. July 27.—To a real cowboy, that is a buckaroo, a rider means horses, the supreme sin in "pulling leather."

As pulling leather consists merely in grabbing the horn of a saddle it has no particular consequence in the eyes of the layman save as a possible means of keeping off the ground and avoiding injury.

A real buckaroo, with his heart in his work and taking pride in his technique, will be thrown rather than pull leather.
