Champ To Train In Secret This Week, Is Report

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 12. (AP)—The power of Jack Dempsey's wallop is to be concealed more or less until Gene Tunney feels it.

Tomorrow the champion will lay off loafing around his luncheon. When he resumes his training grind on Wednesday it will be behind locked gates. Correspondents will be able to penetrate the portals for three days and then on Saturday the champion's workouts will be strictly private.

It will be the first time in his career he has taken such a course. Crowd Bothers Jack In following his plans he said he was unable to concentrate with the cries of a crowd, complimentary or otherwise, ringing in his ears.

The lid placed on the gates at the greyhound racing track probably will cost the champion around $10,000. Dempsey set off the fireworks yesterday in a two-round workout with Tommy Longman. Philadelphia light heavyweight, who boxed the champion slyly on Saturday.

TUNNEY IN PINK STROUDSBURG, Pa., Sept. 12. (AP)—Gene Tunney's handlers now have only one worry. They are on the alert to avoid possibility of the challenger getting too fine. His appearance, it is believed, Tunney could jump ropes and enter the ring tonight for the championship bout in well nigh perfect condition.

Trainer Lou Plak and his associates want the marine on edge the night of the fight and precautions are being taken to hold him back a bit in his training. The boxing has been cut from six to four rounds and recess may be more frequent than planned at the moment.

PICINICH, FORD, PIPP AID REDS

Trio of Players do Much to Put Cincinnati Near Top in National

By Billy Evans American League Umpire. Picinich has played a prominent part in the two major league races this year.

Some of the players have passed from one league to the other, while the rest have merely shifted their team affiliation. In the sensational showing of the Cincinnati Reds, no two players have helped more than Wally Pipp and Val Picinich.

Pipp's fine play at first steadied the Cincinnati infield, gave it balance. Picinich's work back of the bat has been more than satisfactory in these days when good catchers are mighty scarce.

Why these two players were allowed to drift out of the American League is difficult of explanation. There are inferior catchers and first-sackers still doing business in the organization. A third player to help the Reds has been shortstop Ford. He was brought back from the minors, Brooklyn sent him to Minneapolis in a trade that made Johnny Butler a Dodger.

Ford, never a great hitter, has supplied the needed stability at shortstop to the Cincinnati infield. Incidentally, he is a pretty good ball player to have been allowed to pass on to the minors. GROVER AND MAX

Two other stars, Grover Alexander and Max Carey also threaten to play leading parts in the outcome of the National League race. Both have already contributed to the uncertainty of the event.

When the great Alexander was placed on the market by the Chicago Cubs, for breaking training rules, so the report had it, Rogers Hornsby was one of the few National League managers to believe he was still a worth-while pitcher.

Alexander immediately justified that opinion by beating his former teammates, the Cubs in his first start. Since that time his steady hurling has tied the Cardinals over many a tough spot. In a recent three-game series with Boston he appeared in each contest as relief pitcher, saving two of the games.

MADE GREAT START And if Pittsburgh should lose the pennant by a game or two, what a pleasant feeling it would be to Max Carey provided he is a vindictive cuss. Sent to Brooklyn over the waver route for what was labeled mistaken zeal, Carey made his first appearance in a Dodger uniform against the Pirates. He lent valuable assistance to winning of the first game from Pittsburgh and his timely base hit decided another contest. It is just possible Pittsburgh will need those two games before the season is over. It was unfortunate that so fine a character as Carey should be passed on to another club under a cloud, after 15 years of service with Pittsburgh. However, the enthusiastic reception given the former Pirate star by the Brooklyn fans must have lessened the stigma of the affair.

CONSIDER HIS WORKS—"Only fear the Lord and serve Him in truth with all your heart; for consider how great things He hath done for you."—1 Sam. 1:24.

ARE COLLEGE YEARS WASTED?

The subject of going to college is the all-absorbing topic of thought and conversation in many homes these September days. And in the minds of not a few parents and of some prospective students there is the ever-present question of whether or not a college education is worth the time, effort, and the expenditure that is required. Whether one's earning ability and power to enjoy life and capacity for service are actually increased in proper proportion.

Not long ago in a monthly periodical there appeared an article by H. G. Wells, famous English author and critic, in which it was predicted that our great universities and colleges were doomed and in which it was stated that the four years at college are wasted. As you would expect, the chief criticism of the present higher educational system was based on the now prevalent charges regarding athletics, expensive idling, and degenerate social activities. Mr. Wells' solution for the problem, although vague and open to attack from many angles, would require the youth of the world to come into immediate contact with "realities of life" without permitting a four-year "vacation" in college.

There is no question about college being merely a four-year vacation for some students. There is no question about some young men emerging at the end of the course with little more than ability to play football or idle away time pleasantly and spend Dad's money with expert ease. We have previously said in this column that many students who go to college each year have no business there and would be far better off if they were required to come in contact immediately with the problems of making their own way in the world.

But this is a democratic country and students enter college as a result of the wishes of their parents or themselves—if finances permit—and are not selected by great psychiatrists. The result is a great conglomeration of young people, for some of whom four years (or a hundred) at college can do nothing, and for others they can accomplish a great deal. College people are a good bit like any other group of people engaged in the same general occupation. Some of them have natural ability, intelligence, and ambition to make the most of their opportunities—and they come out of a college or out of a mill or off of a farm with a greater capacity for earning, for enjoying life, for getting along with their fellows, for serving society because of the experiences and contacts and opportunities for improvement and advancement that have been theirs. Because every college student doesn't emerge from the portals of his institution and set the world afire with achievement and success is no more logical reason for saying that college educations are wasted than it would be to say that factories fail society because every employe does not emerge as general manager or great inventor.

The four years at college are wasted, it is true, with some students, just as their whole lives are wasted later on, just as a hundred times as many lives are wasted by people who never go to college, if waste is measured by lack of unusual achievement and by the mediocrity to which most of us are confined. But we are of the opinion that the waste is worth while because it is often a necessary part in the finding of real genius, and the achievements of one or two are sometimes of sufficient magnitude to make up for the ordinary doings of many thousands. Even though chaff may be without value, we are willing that it exist for the sake of the wheat. And mediocre college students do not always resemble chaff—may even secure enough personal appreciation for the better things of life that, lacking all else, makes the four years reasonably worth while.
