He was returning the gun, when he went to Rippey's last evening, and had not yet decided what he wanted to do next. While the man from the Simonson camp carried word to the officers, O'Hara crawled under the table when he heard the sheriff at the door, but made no resistance when Breschiar pulled him to his feet.

BRADY TALKS AT ROTARY SESSION

Significance of Armistice Day Stressed by Local Judge

The significance of Armistice day from the standpoint of a man who served in the ranks was outlined for the Rotarians at their luncheon this noon in an address by Judge Hugh E. Brady.

Armistice day, he pointed out, means a step in the progress toward world peace. No one more than the ex-service man realizes that the future holds a question of which shall be exterminated, wars or the race. He emphasized the thought that the world was held nothing enjoyable; that it afforded only hardship, physical, spiritual and intellectual degradation for the men who fought. If the war could be actually pictured as it was experienced and felt, that would be a potent means toward insuring universal peace.

Veterans organizations of the world and other wars are founded on the basis of peace, concurred toward the furthering of world amity, Judge Brady declared.

America, with her position and influence, representing half of the world, is duty-bound to educate the rest of the world toward the idea of universal peace. National controversies must be settled through arbitration if the race is to continue, he finished.

Judge Brady was introduced by Arthur Brown.

Fred E. Kiddie, reporting for the committee in charge, stated that plans are complete for the tri-city meeting at Pendleton, Wednesday, Nov. 10, the affair to be a dinner dance.

Senator H. J. Taylor, of Pendleton, was a guest of the meeting. He expressed appreciation of support of his campaign for reelection, declared his confidence in Mr. Kiddie, his successful opponent, and offered his cooperation in affairs of the district after he relinquishes his office.
