HEALTH

HOW NOSE OBSTRUCTIONS INJURE CHILDREN

By William F. Cleveland, M. D., Indianapolis, Ind. Member Gorgas Memorial Institute.

The effect of nasal obstructions upon the development of the face and mentality of children is not generally known, and it is such information as this that the Gorgas Memorial wishes to convey to those uninformed in health matters.

A certain definite amount of oxygen is necessary to each individual. When deprived of this amount he is quite certain to suffer disastrously in his development.

Obstructions in the nose and further up in the breathing apparatus, therefore, work against the health of the individual by providing incomplete elimination of blood impurities by the reduction of oxygen breathed in. These obstructions also affect the development of the face by forcing mouth breathing. This, in time, very directly influences the development of upper and lower jaws in the formative period.

Adenoid tissue in the very young child may be removed by obstructing breathing, but as a rule the complete tonsil and adenoid operation is not performed until two years of business age, results if left until ten years or later.

A very large portion of the diseases of infancy and early life may be classified as respiratory. And infection of the air passages is far more prevalent in the crowded centers of the country and with those who have abnormal development of certain gland is of the throat.

These glands are known as the tonsils, and indefinitely, as adenoid tissue. There are, in reality, four tonsils which form an imaginary ring, known to the medical profession as the lymphoid ring. Their job is to manufacture white blood corpuscles. When these glands are enlarged and infected, their functioning qualities are destroyed. There are many other lymphatic glands which function in the place of the throat glands, and make the presence of the throat glands really unnecessary for the maintenance of health.

Infection of the throat results in a rise of temperature. There may also be an accompanying infection in the tube which leads to the middle ear. This sometimes terminates in mastoiditis and other complications within the head, such as meningitis, brain abscess, etc.

It follows that any infection of the tonsils should be treated surgically or otherwise, depending upon the advice of the physician in charge. The tonsil and adenoid operation is very common, and when skillfully done, can result in nothing but benefit to child or adult.

The old method in young 20 years ago, of topping the gland, is not done any more by men and women skilled in the work. Now a complete removal is performed, which makes future attacks of tonsillitis impossible.

BREAKFAST—Orange juice, cereal, thin cream, pork sausage, fried apples, pancakes, stirup, milk, coffee.

LUNCHEON—Cream of mushroom soup, crotonok, jellyed tomato salad, rice bread, rice pudding with raisins, milk tea.

DINNER—Stewed chicken with rice, creamed peppers, stuffed celery and endive salad, bean rolls, milk, coffee, pumpkin pie.

This menu is planned for a week-end when the whole family are at home for all their meals. "Big brother" will delight in the breakfast of sausage and pancakes with apples. This same combination makes a very good luncheon occasionally. No potatoes are suggested in either menu. Broth is served as a substitute.

Children under six years of age should not indulge in the fried apples but older persons will find them so much to their liking that the recipe follows.

Fried Apples
Four large tart apples, 1/2 teaspoon cinnamon, 2 tablespoons sugar, 3 tablespoons butter.

Wash apples and wipe dry. Remove cores but do not pare. Cut in quarter-inch slices. Melt butter in frying pan, add apples, cover and cook over a hot fire for several minutes. Remove heat, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon and cook until apples are tender and brown.

If the apples are pared they will fall apart during the cooking. Close watching and a low fire are necessary because the sugar will burn quickly after the sugar is added.

Tart apples are the best for frying but "sub acid" fruit can be used if generously sprinkled with lemon juice.
