

SHIPS EGGS TO
NEW YORK MARTCentral Oregon Finds Excellent Trade in U. S.
Metropolis

BEND, Ore.—New York affords an excellent market for Central Oregon eggs, of the fancy and fresh extra white varieties. It has been learned by the management of the Central Oregon Poultry cooperative, an organization which has been "feeling out" the eastern market for the time when there will be an increased production of eggs in the made-state country.

Even when eggs are shipped east by express in small lots, Central Oregon poultrymen are able to secure a nice return. E. F. Agge, manager of the cooperative, stated today. It costs 16½ cents a dozen to ship eggs east in small lots by express, and even at this rate, the New York price is 7½ cents above the Bend price, 43 cents local wholesale.

Fancy and extra white eggs are now bringing 72 and 76 cents on the New York market. Although it costs 16½ cents a dozen to ship eggs east by express in small lots, the cost by express in carload lots is only 9½ cents a dozen. Freight rates for small shipments are 9½ cents a dozen, and 5½ cents a dozen in carload lots.

Egg production in Central Oregon is at a minimum at present, due to the fact that chickens are molting, but it is believed that production will pick up rapidly in the next few weeks. When the production warrants it, Central Oregon eggs are to be sent east by the cooperative in carload lots.

DUCHESS FLIES TO WORK
LONDON (AP)—The Duchess of Bedford, one of the newest recruits to flying, threatens to become a rival of Mrs. Sophie Elliott Lynn, Britain's pioneer aviator. The Duchess does not have her own airplane, as she prefers to hire one for occasions. She makes frequent trips to Manchester by air, and also always goes to her seat at Newton Stewart, Wigtonshire, by the same method.

The Duchess contends that to keep pace with the times, it is much cheaper, in a way, to hire machines and thus avoid the expense of upkeep.

You can conquer irritability, headaches and fatigue —which results as you know from the age-old enemy, irregularity of habit, just as the old hardy Roman legionaries conquered the then known world, and on the same diet that kept them well through drastic changes of climate which would have killed less well nourished men.

Buy from your grocer today a package of Roman Meal. This cereal is NOT solely a medicinal product compounded of coarse bran, unrelieved by nourishing grains. It is a food, nourishing, stimulating and delicious, composed of the whole wheat and rye berries, with just enough bran added to keep the system regulated, and thoroughly cleansed in Nature's own and only way, through a properly balanced food.

THREE STATES HUNT HER SLAYER

Officials of Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky are hunting for the man who beat Miss Beulah Purvis, 19, of Lawrenceburg, Ind., to death and threw her body into the Big Miami river near Cincinnati. Beulah, one of 14 living children in a family that recently moved to Lawrenceburg from the Kentucky mountains, had been missing for a week before her body was found.

Montana Banking
Laws Under Fire

HELENA, Mont.—The banking code commission, created by the 1925 legislature, and instructed to report by Nov. 1, 1926 has filed its report with the governor and is automatically discharged. Recommendations for some changes in the present law, new regulations for building and loan associations and the shifting of larger responsibilities to the state superintendent of banks and his staff compose the larger part of the report. The principal change in the banking law provides that liquidations of banks be placed in the hands of the state banking department. Such actions are handled by the courts under the existing law.

Members of the commission, which was left to the governor, were: S. V. Stewart, Helena, chairman; C. H. Williams, Deer Lodge; W. A. Brubaker, Terry; Jay G. Larson, state superintendent of banks, was appointed secretary. An appropriation of $4,000 was provided for the commission, of which $1,000 was paid for expenses, leaving a balance of $2,965. No salaries were drawn by the members.

Toledo's Jekyll-Hyde Spreads A

Dual Curse—Murder and Suspicion

By ALLENE SUMNER
NEA Service Writer

TOLEDO, O.—This city, where women are struck down by a phantom clubber, his face dyed with crimson paint, faces a yet graver danger.

For Toledo has become the City of Dreadful Suspicion.

Psychology is the answer. As interpreted by the chief of police, the coroner, the head of Toledo's state hospital, and psychiatrists at Toledo university, psychology says that the identity of this maniac may, when learned, stagger the entire city.

A Leading Citizen?

He may be a leader in the community. He may be a public speaker, a man who rises to say, "We have with us tonight."

But he is not a man who says, "We have with us tonight." For it is at night that the Dr. Jekyll of the sunny daytime becomes the blue-devil-brandishing Mr. Hyde.

"It is very possible that some esteemed and loved husband and father, a respected citizen by day, as the man who has put the curse upon this town," says Dr. O. O. Fordyce, superintendent of the Toledo state hospital and expert on insanity, on maniacs.

He explains that a madistic tendency, rising to a crest at intervals, may send a man otherwise normal out on these early twilight sprees of violence.

That is why suspicion is corroding the heart of Toledo womanhood today; why the popular discussion of pathological tendencies, usually confined to medical clinics and laboratories, has sent a fear through Toledo even greater than the fear of being struck to earth.

Women Desert Streets
The streets of this busy harbor city on the shores of Lake Erie are almost empty of women. Twice did the paint-splashed slayer strike just a few days ago.

The body of a young and popular school teacher, Miss Lily Dale Croy, 28, was found crumpled beneath a fire escape of a school house not four doors from her own home.

The school teacher's skull had been crushed to fragments. A bloody trail led across the autumn leaves on the school house lawn to the spot where the slim young body was found.

Curiously, it was just a year ago that clubber of women broke loose before. There were weeks of horror. Then quiet came again. Toledo breathed freely at last. The taxi business fell back to normalcy as women dared walk the streets once more.

Three women were clubbed to death at that time, and seven others were beaten into unconsciousness.

But now has come the fiendish clubbing and murder of the girl teacher. Her funeral had not been held before the police wagons dashed to a home not six blocks from the girl teacher's where another woman had been murdered.

Hysteria grips the city again; not only over the terror which walks at night, but over doubt and suspicion as well.

"The murderer is not necessarily an obvious degenerate," says science, "not a full-time maniac, not a fiend incarnate—he may be a respectable citizen."

Toledo is a silent city. Only the taxi business is good. Women ride for safety's sake.

Flocks of taxis solicit their business at depot, hotel, movie and street corner.

Girls forego their customary "dates."

Husbands do Shopping

Husbands bring home the provisions for dinner. The butcher shops are crowded with puzzled males.

No agent can induce a housewife to go to her door. If a woman goes downtown by daylight and is detained past dusk, she calls the medical service bureau for an escort.

The escort is a Boy Scout—neat, but not powerful. One wonders what the clubber would do to him! I went at dusk through the mile radius region where the clubber strikes. The leaf-dripping elms and bushes are thick here.

Three girls going home from work walked arm in arm in the center of the street, casting wary glances from side to side.

Only children lent life to this dismal section. One tangle-headed boy ran up a step and scratched a Halloween tick-tack on the window. A woman laying the supper table screamed. Two men rushed out, caught the boy, and whaled him soundly.

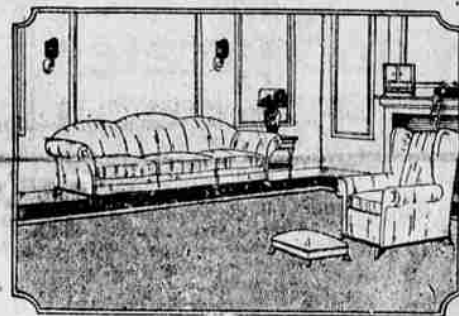

The seven women who, clubbed by the nocturnal prowler, lived to tell the tale, say that he shrieked at them before he hit.

"Get out of my way. I kill all women. I hate you all."

The horror that crouched over them babbled, they say, of a hated faithless wife—of "getting even."
