WEDDING BELLS SOUND FOR WOMEN GOLFERS

Cupid is supposed to shy away from girl golfers. There is a generally accepted belief in England that women who play golf extremely well seldom marry. Women who succeed at the game are supposed to be too impractical to appeal to prospective wooers. Then there is also the theory that no man wants to be married to a woman who can play better golf than he can.

But actual records do not bear out the theory.

Miss Fred Lettice, British woman's champion, is still single, but she has three sisters who are all high-class golfers and all of them are married.

Only one of the 18 women who have won the British women's championship was married at the time of her victory but many of them have married. Lady Margaret Scott, first winner of the championship, became Lady Margaret Hamilton Russell.

Miss Muriel Dodd is now Mrs. Alan MacBeth. Miss Gladys Ravenscroft is Mrs. Temple Dobell. Mrs. Kenyon, who won the championship in 1902, is the only married woman who ever achieved the honor.
