I went—I did no sooner set my teeth into it than I paused; a strange feeling came over me. I came to a quick conclusion. Firmly, I walked up to that cart, replaced the melon and—took a ripe one!"

AT THE THEATERS

"The General," Filmed in Oregon, Now at Arcade

They cleared the track for "The General" up in Oregon, where Buster Keaton's puffing iron horse changed its way to a cinematic triumph, as visitors to the Arcade theater will testify. Railroad in the Pacific Northwest are nothing if not accommodating, so they changed schedules on a branch line for three months in order to let "The General" charge along a twelve-mile stretch of track all by itself.

When Keaton had chosen the rough country in the vicinity of Cottage Grove, Oregon, as the site, which today most romantically the railroad country of Tennessee and Georgia in the sixties, it became necessary for some railroad to set aside certain tracks then in use for the exclusive travels of "The General." It was done in the very best tradition of the Northwest. Schedules were changed and Buster's engines allowed to roam at will during the best sunlit hours. At night the regular traffic passed over the tracks.

It was not unusual for passengers aboard the line to wait patiently for late trains while the Keaton company held up traffic to burn bridges, tear up track and destroy locomotives and cars, all for the entertainment of Arcade audiences who see "The General" today, Tuesday or Wednesday.

Wally Wales In "Ace of Action" At the Star

In "Ace of Action," the gripping western drama which comes to the Star theater Tuesday and Wednesday, Wally Wales has played his trump card. Wally, who is one of the most daring riders of the screen, has some new stunts in this offering which are not only different, but which may be classed as the ultimate in breath-taking feats.

The photodrama is from an original story by Betty Burbridge, the popular fictionist who, at 22 years of age, won the first prize offered by a well known magazine for the best Western story; the production was capably directed by William Herriman, who is fast forging to the front as a director of "horse opera."

YOUR INCOME TAX

No. 32

The tax on dividends is an important item in the returns of many taxpayers. As defined by the revenue act of 1926, the term "dividend" means any distribution made by a corporation to its shareholders, whether in money or other property, out of its earnings or profits accumulated after February 28, 1913. If a dividend represents profits earned by a corporation prior to March 1, 1913, there is no tax, since profits then on hand manifestly belonged to the shareholders, by whom they might have been withdrawn without tax.

A dividend may be payable out of current profits or accumulated surplus, but it has no legal existence until it is "declared" by a formal resolution of the directors of the corporation. The ordinary form of dividend is the periodical cash distribution of current profits. However, dividends may be paid in securities or other property. For example, a corporation may distribute among its stockholders securities in which it has invested its earnings. Such securities are to be reported as dividends by the stockholders at the fair market value on the date of receipt.

Dividends must be distinguished from bond interest, which is an expense of the corporation and not a share of its profits.

A taxable distribution made by a corporation is income to the stockholders as of the date when the cash or property was unqualifiedly made subject to their demands. Cash dividends, in the hands of an individual, while exempt from all normal tax, are subject to the surtax rates for the year in which received. A stockholder pays no normal tax on dividends for the reason that the corporation which declares them is subject to the normal tax on the earnings out of which they are paid.

The rate of income tax on corporations was increased by the revenue act of 1926 from 12 1/2 percent to 13 percent for the calendar year 1926 and to 13 1/2 percent for the calendar year 1927 and subsequent years.
