We really had thought that the war was over a long time ago but it looks like the war has just begun.

The old home we moved into when we came to La Grande was filled with a strong regiment of bed bugs. They laid in their trenches all day and went over the top at night. When the first winter overtook us we could hear our echo in the floor board. Bravely we fought the hungry wolf from our door. We had to trade our touring car for potatoes to live on through the first winter. But now we have an old Ford car and a Jersey cow and everybody says to us "Good Morning."

We appreciate the kind treatment and the enormous trade that is being turned our way. Day before yesterday we had a traffic jam and we had to help push a touring car out by hand in order to let the load of shingles, field fencing, lumber and coal start moving. We are asking you to please be patient with us and be careful where you park your cars so as not to cause any more traffic jams. If kalsomine is all that you want and we cannot get to you the color cards are laying on the counter in the paint house and the numbers to correspond. Farmers that are hauling their own fencing please load it on your rig from the larger pile as the smaller ones are already sold. Order your coal 5 days ahead in case you want it delivered this afternoon.

There was a mistake made in our ad the other day. It said our first carload of machinery was due to arrive. It is the third carload. It is due here Monday.

We haven't put in a stock of windmills yet—we don't hardly think it is necessary.

WANTED
We would like to buy about 50 or 75 one and five-gallon tin cans suitable to send out lard oil, turpentine, etc. in. Able wants to buy a good second-hand baby, large size. He thinks he knows where he can sell it at a profit. It surely looks like spring has come. Not only has the groundhog served his extra time but the snail are running in the sandy river and the strong hot breeze that swept over the city last night about 6 o'clock did almost turn the brown grass green.

Able has a deal on for a large bunch of fence posts. It hasn't quite been completed yet but Able hopes to announce its completion in a day or so and their price will certainly tickle the farmers.
