Teacher: If there are any dumbbells in this room, please stand up.
A pause, then finally Johnny stood up.

Teacher: What do you consider yourself a dumbbell?
Johnny: Well, not exactly that, teacher, but I hate to see you standing all alone.

Uncle (to nephew who has just started to school): So you go to school now, huh?
Nephew: Yes, uncle.
"Let me hear you spell puppy."
"I'm too big a boy to spell puppy. Try me on dog."

"I am sorry," said the housewife to the colored applicant, "but I advertised for a Scandinavian cook."
"Oh, de Lawd's sake!" replied Vasillia Washington, "jes jes's a pulson kin cook, what diffrence do it make what her 'tigion is?"

SILENT DRAMA
The motion picture gives the heart a thrill, disarming charm. The actor plays his speechless part and has no need of grammar.

Maloney Brings Back the West That Was

In a stirring drama of the West that was, namely, "The Outlaw Express" Leo Maloney once more demonstrates his ability as a western actor. This is by far the best picture he has ever made and is the attraction at the Star theater today and Wednesday.

Maloney as Miles Wayburn, a secret agent of the old Wells Fargo express company, unravels a mystery that is as baffling as it is thrilling. An operative of the company has been shot to death by an unknown assailant and Wayburn is sent out to Congar Pass, Colorado to "get his man." How he does it, what happens to him and the events pertaining thereto afford the theme of one of the best western dramas which have come this way in months.

Joan Renee, Melborne MacDowell and Albert Hart give excellent support to Maloney in this production.

Ronald Colman Is Star In "Night of Love"

"A villain of three-fourths and a hero of one-fourth make a perfect man," according to Ronald Colman, featured player in George Fitzmaurice's production for Samuel Goldwyn, "The Night of Love," now showing at the Sherry theater for the last time tonight.

Never before has Colman been called upon to play a villain through four reels and then become a hero in the last two reels.

But in "The Night of Love," Colman's role of the Spanish spy's bandit demands that he commit all the dastardly deeds of the true villain, even to abduction and robbery. It is only in the final episodes of the thrilling story of the early feudal period that the actor turns hero and claims the right of all heroes—the girl.

Generally, heroes never vacillate from their perfection. Very often their virtue becomes annoyingly acute. Not so in this new kind of love story.

Almost with the first crank of the camera, Colman starts out a bandit, ravishing feudal lands and domains ruled by his hated enemy, the Duke de La Garda. Not until the last reel or two does the villain turn hero, realising his career of banditry must end when he loves the beautiful Princess Marie (Vilma Banky).

"I hope all my future roles will be as human and inspiring as the role of Marie." Maloney is my favorite thus far—because he lived and breathed as a real man, devoid of all movie sanctimoniousness."

Comedy showing "What A Life." His wife has got a baby girl and he's had a "Boy Wanted" sign in the window for a week.

Mother: "Why aren't you going to the party, Gladys?"
Gladys: "Good gracious, mother! I've already been seen twice at these parties."

Most of us are so busy dodging brick bats we couldn't recognize a bouquet if one should be thrown at us.

Farmer Gray—You know that boy of mine's got to be a gold-digging leech since he went off to college.

Farmer Brown—How's that?
Farmer Gray—Why, every morning he combs his head and brushes his teeth.

Superb Cast In Griffith Drama At Arcade

You'll be sorry if you miss "Sorrows of Satan." D. W. Griffith's latest Paramount picture which is the attraction at the Arcade theater today and Wednesday, should be seen by each and every movie-goer, because—

It advances the technique of motion picture direction in one tremendous leap and places the film miles ahead of others. Once more Griffith proves himself the Great Maestro. Because—

"Pantomime is placed on a higher level than ever before. Adolphe Menjou as a modern Satan leaves nothing to be desired. Ricardo Cortez proves himself an actor of depth and feeling. Carol Dempster is superb and Lya de Putti, making her first American appearance, carves a niche for herself in the hearts of American film fans. And because—

Mario Corbelli's widely read novel makes good picture material. "Sorrows of Satan" tells the story of a Lucifer, thrown from Heaven with the promise of an hour of bliss within the Gates of Paradise for each soul which resists him.
