SCHOOL EXHIBIT TO BE TUESDAY

Annual Display by Four Upper Grades Will Be Given in Evening

Plans have been completed for an annual high school exhibit which will be much larger and better than any display ever held in the high school here before. It is reported. It will take place Tuesday evening, May 10, at the high school building and in connection with the exhibition of work of the high school students there will be a 30-minute program.

The program, which will be held in the auditorium, will consist of music and short talks by the faculty and student body members. Following the program the exhibits will be viewed, and after that there will be a short demonstration of physical education in the school in the gymnasium.

Academics Display—For the first time in the history of the La Grande high school there will be a display in academics. This exhibit will be arranged in the rooms on the main floor of the school building and in the hall. As in previous years the exhibits in manual training, cooking, and sewing will be in the industrial arts building.

Special invitations have been sent out to all of the parents of the high school students to attend the exhibit, which will be informative and will combine the idea of an open house and the exhibit of the school work. Parents of children who will enter high school next year are also especially invited, as well as all friends of the school.

Evening Chosen—The exhibit is being held in the evening to enable the fathers of the students as well as the mothers to attend.

If the exhibit proves the success this year which school authorities hope it will it will become an annual event, and will be made bigger and better next year than this.

Diamond Lake Is Still Ice-Bound

PORTLAND, Ore., May 6 (AP)—Diamond lake is still ice-bound, according to reports from men at the game commission, erg-taking station there. Erg-taking has been started however, in the clear water at the outlet of the lake. The ice is stubby on top and is expected to break up at any time.

Most Squirrels In East Oregon Gabrielson Says

ENTERPRISE, Ore., May 6.—Four Eastern Oregon counties use hair of all the squirrel poison put out in the state, said Ira N. Gabrielson, of the rodent control division of the United States Biological survey, who was in the county last week. The four are Wallowa, Union, Baker and Grant, and of these Wallowa county heads the list.

The reason for this is found in climate and soil conditions. Ground squirrels thrive best in a grass growing region. Central Oregon has not enough rainfall or grain and so squirrels are found little except along creek bottoms and in meadows. The pests do not live on a desert.

Wallowa county is a grass country with sufficient rainfall to grow vegetation everywhere on the hills. Fields of grain between the great stretches of pasture land give the rodents a chance hardly found elsewhere. Along about in 1919, when many farmers were living in the hills, they made an impressive showing against the squirrels which decreased in numbers very noticeably. Since then the campaign has not been pressed, and three unusually favorable spring seasons have permitted them to multiply.

It will be remembered that spring came early in 1924, 1925 and 1926, and ground squirrels flourished. Few of the young died from exposure and the litters were large, often with nine squirrels each, an average with the normal of seven each.

A few days in the county convinced Mr. Gabrielson that more poison has been put out early this year than for many seasons, and in the Leap district he found the farmers doing very effective work, which will greatly reduce the number of squirrels in that area. As for the county as a whole, he says the rodents will not be wiped out until the pasture lands as well as the grain fields are poisoned.

About 302,500 of last year's trout fry were planted during the past month in Lane and Benton counties, according to the March report of M. L. Rickman, superintendent of hatcheries. Benton county streams received 76,000 cutthroat fry and 292,500 rainbow, and 24,000 eastern brook went into Lane county streams.
