CINDERELLA

I almost missed getting my ad in this morning because I was so busy waiting on the customers and getting all four trucks moving in every direction, and just remember now, if this ad does you any good you have got to read it first by the skin of your teeth.

In spite of the rainy morning, people have been to here as thick as flies, and there are no lines, either. Everybody is looking for something.

Sometimes a man rushes in and starts to play his order and backs out like a crayfish and goes out of here like a lion. But usually in a half an hour he comes in like a lamb. Then without any questions we take his order and deliver the goods. We never ask him where he has been. We figure it out in this way: by putting everything down to rock-bottom prices it saves the people a lot of time in loading around. Even though they come in from a long distance, all equipped with a truck and a roll of bills, we are always pleased to meet them.

Another man has come rushing in now and he is picking his finger nails and stomping around. He acts like he is in a hurry; in fact, when he heard me phoning in my ad he said, "I will weigh my own nails up," and slammed the warehouse door.

No one-of-these-truck is waiting for me to weigh a big load of coal for them and six men are standing here in the office. I'll not keep them waiting any longer.

I'll probably have something funny for you Monday.

"Happy Dust!" Somehow the words symbolize so well that extra bit of satisfaction we try to give every customer who enters our store.
The J. C.
