Miss Brown In Piano Recital

A large crowd of interested musicians and music lovers of the city gathered at the library auditorium last evening in spite of the rain storm for a piano recital, in which Miss Dorothy Brown was presented by her teachers, Miss Dorothy Pleasant.

Miss Brown played a long and difficult program, in which she displayed unusually fine technique and an ability to play with a great amount of expression. It is said.

Her program consisted of four groups.

Miss Ann Manne, soprano, studying under Mrs. A. L. Richardson, assisted Miss Brown, she sang two groups, "The I Wake" by Woodford-Minden and "Daisy Lullaby" by Gilbert, and responded to the applause with an encore number.

Mrs. E. L. Holmes accompanied her at the piano.

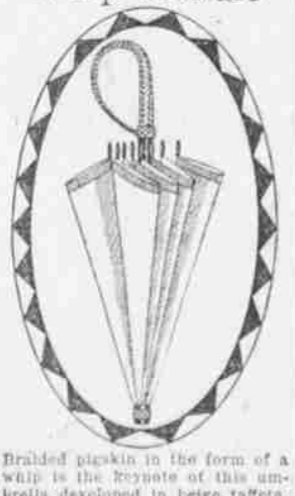

Both of the young musicians were presented with bouquets following their numbers.

The auditorium stage was prettily arranged for the occasion. A grand piano, loaned through the courtesy of the Eastern Oregon Music company, was used and besides it was a large basket of plants and yellow amaryllids. In the background was a screen and baskets of tulips and flowers. A bench with wavy bright pillows and a floor lamp added to the attractiveness of the setting.

Tenets Miss Pleasant will present another student, Miss Judith Snodgrass, in recital. She will be assisted by Flavia Ritter Snodgrass.

Because of the prevalent superstition regarding the number 13, all No. 13 trains on sleeping cars of an English railway will be No. 14.

persons in the home but, or is suspected of having consumption, he should, whenever possible, be isolated from the children.

If this cannot be done, the spread of the disease should be prevented as much as possible in the household by having the sick one's expectorations collected in paper bags and these promptly burned; by caring for the proper ventilation of the premises; and by securing chances for direct sunlight, both for the sick one and the well ones in the household.

Whenever such a consumptive patient coughs, a paper bag or some such thing should be held against the mouth and immediately burned. Millions of germs would otherwise be shot into the room air and, mixed with the dust, become a source of danger. All dusting in the house should be done with a damp cloth, which afterwards should be boiled before using again.

In recent years the public has been educated to heed certain symptoms pointing to evidence of beginning consumption, and thus more cases have come early under proper care and management. Protected colds, influenza, hoarseness, with signs of even moderate evening fever, pallor, and loss of appetite and weight should be warning enough for the parents to call in the family physician.

GUARD CHILDREN AGAINST THE WHITE PLAGUE

By E. R. Ahlman, M. D., Hoquiam, Wash.
Member George Memorial Institute
Over two thousand years ago the Greek physician, Hippocrates, said: "He who lives in a crowded city, loses weight and turns pale, coughs, and is easily tired, should move into the country, rest, and drink sweet milk."

A very good description of the White Plague, or consumption, and indeed an excellent suggestion of treatment for those early days. For hundreds of years after that time very little progress was made in combating this dread disease, and it is only recently that real progress has been made.

Not so long ago over one hundred thousand lives were lost annually in the United States from consumption. In late years this huge number has been brought down something like 20 or 25 per cent. This reduction is very gratifying, but it is only the beginning of this fight of ours against consumption. We should use every means at our disposal to continue our efforts along these lines, so that there will be fewer new sufferers and a greater number of consumptives returned as active and useful members of society every year.

Medical science has proved that consumption, if recognized early, is curable, and by understanding the mode of spreading this disease, it is preventable to a great extent. We must keep in mind that it is the young child who is most apt to catch the contagion. Knowing this, it should be our first duty to remove the source of contagion from the child's surroundings as soon as possible.

Milk, particularly, should be had from a known source, and the necessity and need of fresh air, sunshine, and cleanliness must not be neglected. If any member or
