MENUS

By Sister Mary BREAKFAST—Blackberries, cereal, cream, eggs poached in milk on toast, crisp toast, milk, coffee.

LUNCHEON—Clear soup, toast sticks, spinach salad, rice custard pudding, milk, tea.

DINNER—Spanish liver, baked new potatoes, string bean salad, rhubarb jelly with whipped cream, crisp cookies, milk, coffee.

Spanish liver is usually good and out-of-the-ordinary. The average housewife serves liver in one or two ways with the result that the family soon tires of this highly beneficial dish.

One pound calves' liver, 2 slices bacon cut 1/4 inch thick, 8 tiny silver skinned onions, 2 cups carrot balls, 1/2 cup broken fresh mushrooms, 2 tablespoons minced parsley, 2 cups canned tomato pulp, 2 cups boiling water, 2 tablespoons flour, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1-1/2 teaspoon paprika.

Cut liver in half-inch slices. Cut bacon in strips 1/4 inch wide. Lay liver slices with bacon strips. Peel and parboil onions. Scrape carrots and cut into balls with a French vegetable cutter.

Place in vegetable oil in a hot pan. Clean and break mushrooms. Rub canned tomatoes through a strainer. Put liver, vegetables, mushrooms, tomato pulp and water into a casserole. Cover and cook in a moderate oven for two and one-half hours.

Mix flour and salt and paprika. Slowly stir in enough cold water to make a thin paste. Stir into the gravy in casserole on top of the stove. Bring to the boiling point, stirring constantly. Return to the oven for fifteen minutes. Serve from casserole.

Common table salt, one tablespoonful to a pint of water, can be added to the water as a disinfectant, but it is the heat and the moisture that do the greatest good. Delay in summoning a physician in cases of infection frequently leads to serious difficulty and sometimes death.

When there is a safety signal that the infection should have expert medical advice.

HEALTH

PREVENT BLOOD POISON BY CARING FOR MINOR INFECTIONS

By William B. Marbury, M. D., Washington, D. C. Member Gorgas Memorial Inst.

As a match may start conflagration so a pin stick of the finger may, unless treated, lead to blood poisoning. This result is rare, but less dangerous and yet very disabling conditions are not uncommon.

The symptoms of infection are pain, swelling, redness, heat. Of these the most important is pain. Pain that is severe enough to keep one awake at night usually means infection—that pus is forming. The pain is of the throbbing kind.

Pus, when confined, spreads along the line of least resistance and often to the deeper tissues since skin is tough and prevents pus coming to the surface. Many have seen red or purple streaks extending up the arm following infection of the hand. This means a spreading infection and is dangerous. About the same time kernels appear above the elbow or in the armpit. These are way-stations which prevent, at least for a time, the infection from getting into the general circulation and causing blood poisoning.

Open wounds are not so dangerous as closed ones—the so-called puncture wounds. All puncture wounds of the feet, as for example, due to stepping on a nail, should be opened and cauterized. When a wound is once infected it should be allowed to heal from the bottom and not just to seal over with a crust or scab.

The reason is that pus can accumulate under a scab and spread to the surrounding tissues instead of draining to the surface. A wet dressing over the wound is the best way to prevent a scab from forming.

Of particular danger are the infections which start in the region of the upper lip and within the nose. They should never be picked or squeezed because it is only a short distance to one of the large blood sinuses within the brain, and germs may travel to the sinus along the course of a small vein. It is much safer to apply hot compresses until the boil or pimple come to a head and discharge.

Broadly speaking the treatment advised for the usual infection is this: localize the infection by means of heat and then open the wound under aseptic conditions and drain. Infections of hand or foot are washed in a hot water bath at an even temperature not so hot as to be uncomfortable to the hand. Hot compresses frequently wring out of the solution are applied to infections on other parts of the body.

Common table salt, one tablespoonful to a pint of water, can be added to the water as a disinfectant, but it is the heat and the moisture that do the greatest good. Delay in summoning a physician in cases of infection frequently leads to serious difficulty and sometimes death.
