REDEMPTION: God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for he shall receive me. Psalm 49:15.

John D. Rockefeller has solved the food problem. He eats everything he wants; but he doesn't want much.

One thing the newly organized highway commission might put down for early consideration is the extension of the highway from Joseph around Wallowa lake. That strip of six or seven miles is as important from a traffic standpoint as the rest of the Wallowa highway. It can never be kept in proper condition under present circumstances, and the importance of the lake as a vacation center argues that the road to it become a state responsibility. The cost would be small—the general benefit great.

LOWDEN, HOOVER OR DAWES

Mark Sullivan, one of the best political writers and observers in the country, gives an interesting summary of possible presidential candidacies in yesterday's papers. The conclusion to be drawn from Sullivan's opinions is much the same as most republicans have already reached since the Coolidge announcement of withdrawal—that Lowden, Hoover or Dawes are the most likely men to receive the republican nomination, with a few other leaders having an outside chance.

Although Sullivan doesn't say so, Frank Lowden, former governor of Illinois and farm relief champion, is probably the best bet at the start. He is definitely a candidate and has large and enthusiastic following in the Middle West. He has been a strong party man for 30 years and was slated to receive the nomination in 1920. He is not only approved by agriculture rather generally but he is "well and favorably known" by business and industrial interests. Lowden should enter the convention with the nucleus for a nomination unless some strong sectional opposition develops.

In that case, and if Hoover doesn't develop too strong, Dawes might well become a candidate to whom party strength would shift, according to Sullivan. Dawes has been prominent in the party since McKinley, has been contrary to Coolidge on the farm relief program, and is also a big business man highly respected for his executive ability and efficiency.

No one knows, definitely, what Hoover may do, but he is one of the main potential candidates even though he hasn't been long in republican councils. Speaking of Hoover particularly, Sullivan says:

"The chief reason for the intention that existed until last Tuesday to renominate Coolidge was the wish to preserve the status quo to avoid any sensation of change or interruption. Particularly did this argument weigh with respect to business. The country, as a whole, is extremely prosperous, and there is a strong motive for wishing not to give this prosperity any psychological chill through fear of change. Looking at the succession to Mr. Coolidge in this aspect, Hoover is clearly the logical man. Three men have been associated in the public mind with the country's extraordinary period of prosperity. They are Mr. Coolidge, Secretary Mellon and Secretary Hoover. Mr. Mellon is too old for the presidency, and if Mr. Coolidge is not available, Hoover is the one man who, stepping into the republican nomination and into the White House, would most strongly convey to the sense of permanence, of continuity of policy."

Considering the three chief possibilities, Lowden, Hoover, or Dawes, it is hard to see how the republican party can get on from naming a strong man, one who would make a true president. From the popular standpoint, considering the entry as a whole and leaving political influences outside, Hoover stands out. Whether that fact will influence party leaders to accept him or whether the more creditable party out of Lowden or Dawes will win out remains to be seen. Matter what happens, it looks as though the country will well supplied with able leadership.

DELANEY FIGHTS UZCUDUN AUG. 11

Heavyweight Battle May Be One of Years Most Colorful Ring Bouts

By Alan J. Gould
Associated Press Sports Editor
NEW YORK, August 7.—Paulino Uzcudun, the Spanish world champion, and Jack Delaney, erstwhile French-Canadian sharpshooter, have an argument to settle that may furnish one of the year's most colorful heavyweight ring battles, even though it has no title significance.

The picturesque Spaniard is Basque, and both, originally, and all, possess the statures "Baptists of the North" in a 15-round battle at the Yankee Stadium, August 11. Both have ambitions to fight for the world's heavyweight title and they won't have an opportunity to further this desire until 1928, at the earliest. Both seemed slated at the start of last winter's slugging sessions to occupy important roles in this year's title drama. But Delaney's rise was abruptly checked by Jimmy Maloney, the Boston Irishman, while Paulino was shut out by Jack Dempsey's refusal to engage the Spaniard in a preliminary bout.

Since he knocked out Harry Wills in four rounds, Paulino is more confident than ever that he is headed for a championship match. The Spaniard eagerly sought a match with Dempsey and showed no reluctance to try conclusions with the shag-polluting Delaney, who has cut aside his right-heavyweight title to concentrate on a come-back as a full-fledged heavyweight.

Training camp reports say Delaney has fully recovered from the effects of an injured left hand and "tennis elbow" in his right arm—consequences of his match with Maloney. If so, he probably will outpunch the Spaniard. But whether or not the Bridgeport butler can bring down the rugged Spaniard is another matter.

There are few harder specimens in the ring than Uzcudun. In fact, observers of his first two fights in this country labeled him more of a "shopping block" than a wood-chopper. His power of assimilation seemed greater than his punching powers but since then he has displayed the knockout blow that felled the giant Wills at Robert Field. The news offered little reason as to how Uzcudun hits if he took a full-powered wallop nevertheless, he brought him down.

"If Delaney couldn't bring down Maloney in ten rounds he can't beat him, what chance has he to topple Paulino?" the Spaniard's followers ask.

"Paulino is made to order for Delaney," counters the latter's admirers. "Jack will knock the Spaniard dizzy and then knock him out."

The man who wrote "The better to have loved and lost" must have had a good break on the Saturday.

Medford and Grants Pass on Hit Spree

GRANTS PASS, Ore., Aug. 5 (AP)—In a game that resembled hitting practice for both teams, Grants Pass yesterday defeated Medford by a score of 22 to 16. Greatly weakened by the loss of several of their star players, Medford was unable to stop the local victors who scored almost at will. The visitors used four pitchers. Yesterday's games sent Ashland into first place with Klamath Falls second. Medford and Grants Pass tied in second position. Ashland now has a lead which insures them the present series.
