A. Beaver, who are in Portland.

Former Trail President Here—"I am very pleased to see no many improvements going on in La Grande. Since leaving this section of the country, I have heard a lot about La Grande's good condition and growth," declared Walter Meacham, now of Portland, but until a year ago, a resident of Baker where he had offices as president of the Old Oregon Trail association and secretary of the Baker chamber of commerce. "I am also pleased with the general prosperity in Eastern Oregon and am delighted to hear about the fine crops which are being harvested," he continued. Mr. Meacham is now with the National Bond and Discount corporation, an investment company, and is here with J. C. Dennis, also of Portland, looking after the interests of that Western Oregon legionnaires are still speaking their praises of the state-keeping convention and expressing a wish that he might have been in attendance. This is the former trail president's first trip to La Grande since last November. "I am enjoying visits with friends in the city, as well as transacting business for a few days," said Mr. Meacham.

Visited Relatives Here—Mrs. Charles Gump has returned to her home here from Pendleton, where she visited late August, where she visited at St. Joseph's academy. Mrs. Gump was accompanied by Miss Margaret Donavan. Sister Pauline has been in the academy in Pendleton for the past two and a half years. She has now been transferred from there to the St. Francis Academy in Baker, as head of the music department. Es-Officer Here—Six officers in the United States army in the last three great wars, beginning with the Civil War, has been the thrilling experience of William R. H. Cooke, now of Portland, recently retired warrant officer of the United States army, who stopped here this morning on his way to Wallawa lake. This remarkable period of service has included also a number of Indian and lesser wars and skirmishes, extending over the greater period of Mr. Cooke's life his service in the Civil war having taken place until he was a young lad in his teens. Mr. Cooke, in still strong looking, is keen in conversation and displays unusual vitality and vigor for a man of his age. His service as a warrant officer extends over 20 years, the first 15 of which did not require military attire. When queried as to what he thought of the present increase in armaments for the United States he declared that he had always been opposed to any such increase. He expressed regret that the recent conference at Geneva came to an unsatisfactory ending and blamed it upon selfishness. "World peace will never be accomplished unless there is an equal and selfishness that exists in the world today," said Mr. Cooke. "Human nature has made little change, that I can observe," he continued. "It will take a lot of time to instill peace principles in the entire world. I wish prophesied it 2,000 years ago, but it hasn't been reached yet." Mr. Cooke was retired from his post about four years ago and has been "loafing" as he expresses it, since that time, at his home in Portland.
