We are no more enthusiastic over 100% pure Monarch paint than the master painters who are using it. I will tell you why. White lead, zinc and linseed oil and drier are the materials that combine in the correct proportion to form the most durable, satisfactory, protective paint coating known. Lead and oil alone make a paint of very short durability and after investigation by rubbing the thumb over the surface exposed to the weather for a short time you will find that it chalks and rubs off quite easily. To overcome the chalking and to secure greater hardness and durability, zinc must be added in the correct proportion. Zinc alone makes your paint an extreme brittleness that cracks and chips off in a short time yet zinc possesses extreme whiteness, a great covering, spreading capacity and at the same time carries lots of oil. Therefore these two pigments when incorporated with linseed oil in the typically correct proportion produce a paint that is not only 100% pure but forms into a leathery and elastic paint film that stretches in the summer time and contracts in the winter without breaking. Any adulteration destroys this elasticity and weakens the resistance to extreme changes of temperature and finally results in the paint chalking and wearing off. I have given you the reason why we sincerely believe that Monarch paint is the best paint on earth.

Selection of the right variety for the district and the farm system is regarded by the experiment station as the most important single factor in successfully growing Oregon grain crops. Standardization has many advantages one of which is better yield, since one variety is usually better than any other for each district. To find this one variety requires many tests extending over a number of years.
