Juan - Les - Pins Dancing
Establishment Wrecked
—Cherbourg Battles

NICE, France, Aug. 27 (AP)—Seven persons were injured, one fatally by the explosion of a bomb thrown from a railroad track into an open air dancing establishment at Juan-Les-Pins, near here last night.

The bomb fell between dancers, otherwise more persons would have been hurt. The dancers fled precipitately, leaving all their effects behind.

Louis Dubois, a Russian, one of those injured, died this morning. The police are inclined to believe the bomb was thrown by an anarchist who hoped to injure some of the wealthy foreigners gathered at the fashionable Riviera resort.

Three French citizens and three Russians were slightly injured by the bomb. It is stated that a number of others were wounded, but refused to make themselves known to the authorities. No Americans were involved.

PITCHED BATTLE

CHERBOURG, France, Aug. 27 (AP)—Seven-Venezetti sympathizers, two thousand strong, fought a pitched battle with the forces of law and order from 3 o'clock last night until four past midnight in an effort to reach the American consulate. About 15 of them attained the goal at midnight, but in charge of policemen who had arrested them, the consulate being transformed into a temporary police station. Realizing there was no chance of getting the better of the police and soldiers, the others then dispersed.

Although it times the encounter was a savage affair, the most threatening stance at the defenders of the consulate from behind a barricade of coal wagons and barrels, no great harm was done. A large number of both sides received ed minor hurts, but nobody was seriously injured. Windows of the military club and other buildings and street lamps in the district were smashed.

The manifestants were opposed, in addition to the police and soldiers, by mounted gendarmes and firemen. The latter brought their horses into play, forcing back the crowds at various points with streams of water.

The concentrated movement against the consulate followed a meeting of protest against the election of Rocco and Vanzetti.

PRE-COOKED CEREAL

The idea that cereals must be cooked for several hours to make them digestible, has been abandoned. Scientific experiments have shown that even raw starch is easily assimilated.

Starch, however, which is one of the chief food materials in cereals, does not taste good unless it is well cooked. For this reason it is advisable to cook any cereals until the grains are soft and palatable.

Some of the pre-cooked cereals on the market may be prepared with very short cooking in a double boiler.

Yellowstone, Presidential Host Since 1883, Still Virgin Scene

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK (AP)—Three chief executives of the United States before President Coolidge have visited Yellowstone, national park, yet with the exception of a 200-mile road system, the hotels and the camps, the region is in exactly the same state as when President Arthur entered it on horseback 44 years ago.

President Roosevelt, when he visited Yellowstone in 1897, laid the cornerstone of the huge arch at the north entrance, describing the park as "For the Benefit and Enjoyment of the People," and following these tenets, laid down in the congressional act of 1872 creating the park, the government has exercised increasing vigilance in preserving the wilderness unspoiled.

Four years ago President Harding enroute to Alaska, devoted two days to a trip through Yellowstone. The rapid motor ride he enjoyed here was not available to preceding presidents, for the park was not opened to motor travel until 1914. Prior to that time, horse-drawn stage coaches transported visitors over the roads.

Today approximately 50,000 private motor cars come to the park each year, and a fleet of more than 200 busses provide for those who come by rail.

The park is at a much higher altitude than the summer white house in the Black Hills. This land of steam vents, geysers and hotter pools is 7,300 feet above the sea, ringed about with mountains rising to a height of two miles. Lake Yellowstone is the highest in North America for its size, 129 square miles.

In the lake, and in Yellowstone river is a new species of trout, the cutthroat, a game western fighter, down the river beyond the rim of the 1,200 foot deep canyon, with its falls twice as high as Niagara.

new altitudes by motor are attainable at the summit of Mt. Washburn, 10,237 feet. Near Tower Falls, where President Roosevelt once camped, roam many antelope, Beavers abound, among them the cut that so delighted President Harding now full-grown. Big horn sheep frequent the slopes of Mt. Washburn. Deer, moose and elk browse in the park in numbers as great, and as unafraid as when the white man first came to the region. The only active Indian fighting in Yellowstone took place just 58 years ago this summer, when the Nez Perce eluded the pursuit of General O. O. Howard, crossing the park. Several Indian tourists were killed. Rope burns on the trees were a number. A single army wagon was lost down a steep slope near Yellowstone Falls have left their marks in the bark today.

In traveling along the park roads the visitor twice crosses the continental divide between the lesser region at Old Faithful and Lake Yellowstone.

Most disquieting among the features of the park are its geysers, chief of them Old Faithful, which spouts every 65 minutes to a height of 150 to 200 feet. Grand geysers go to even greater heights, and has been performing every 14 to 16 hours this summer.
