There's Real Romance In Forty Years Of Community Progress

The story of any community's progress is inseparably linked with the banks of that community. Before there can be progress there must be vision, ability, and faith in the value of that which is to be accomplished. Banking institutions, by supplying the capital, have a definite part in practically every improvement.

There's real romance, as well as hard business, in community progress—romance in the making of farms, in the the planting of orchards, in the growing of stock, in the building of business houses, in the construction of homes. The start of a savings account—the accumulation of funds and the building of credit—the purchase of a farm, a home, or a business—the long, hard pull to success.

For forty years this bank has had intimate contact with the business of the community—of these two valleys. Through four decades it has aided, encouraged, and had faith in the progress and development of La Grande and Union and Wallowa counties, and in the people who were making that progress possible.

Friendly attention to every financial problem, no matter how small; friendly counsel based on long experience with an intimate knowledge of business—these characteristics have been sought after and adhered to from the day of founding. Forty years have done much for La Grande and the Grande Ronde Valley and this bank is happy to have had a friendly part in it—happy to have grown with this community so that its strength and facilities can promise an equally prominent part in the progress that is still to be realized.
