Giants Move Up To Second While Cubs Drop Down

By the Associated Press

With Chicago's losing streak standing at seven games today and the victorious dash of the New York Giants having mounted to 10 games in a row, the National league pennant chase found the Cubs down in third place and the Giants more firmly entrenched in second position behind the Pirates.

Joe McCarthy's Cubs began a long home stand in Wrigley Park yesterday by losing a hard fought contest to the St. Louis Cardinals, 2-1.

The Giants tenth game in a row and the third straight over Philadelphia was obtained 6-0.

Pittsburg kept its two-game advantage in first place by downing Cincinnati 5-4. Waner's Inc., baseballs most illustrious pair of brothers, blasted two home runs in the fifth.

Brooklyn and Boston divided a double header, both scores being 3-2.

Todt's two home runs gave the Boston Red Sox a 5-3 win over Washington in the American league's feature contest.

The St. Louis Browns ran their winning record to five victories in six games when they whipped Detroit 4-3.

Three White Sox errors contributed to the team's downfall before Cleveland.

The league-leading Yankees played an exhibition game with Jersey City.

Tigers Furnish Bat Champions

DETROIT (AP)—The Detroit Tigers' outfield has been the most fertile pasture for hard hitters in the American League, and this year another promising crop is ready to ripen by late September.

In 27 years of competition, the Tiger outfield has held the League's champion batsman 16 times — a record not even approached by any other club. Only three men have participated in the record making—Ty Cobb, Harry Heilmann and Heinie Manush—and it is Heilmann again this year who is driving after another championship.

Cobb of course was the principal reason through the years for the persistent batting supremacy in the Tiger outfield. The Georgia Jewel won individual batting honors of the league twelve times. Heilmann, almost as much a veteran as Cobb, won three championships, starting in 1921 and winning every other year. Manush, not so long out of the Western League, took the title last year.

A Maltese cat which recently 'adopted' a Davenport, Iowa, hardware store as her home, and a few days later presented the employes with a family of six kittens, combines rare mother love with hiking ability. Cat and kittens were given to a farmer ten miles from town. The next day the cat started moving her family, one at a time, back to the store. At the end of three days she had made the necessary six trips, walking a total of 120 miles.

Postage stamps as home decorations are becoming increasingly popular in England. Papering his wife's boudoir with unused stamps cost a wealthy financier nearly $50,000, but he was so pleased with the effect that he had his main hall floor covered in the same way, using ten different shades of stamps to form a colorful mosaic.

THE HOUSE FLY
By Franklin H. Martin, M. D.
Chicago

President, Gorgas Memorial

Insects are more deadly than wild beasts, C. Wesley Edwards, of Evanston, Ill., points out in an interesting article concerning the common house fly. Mr. Edwards is an engineer and was in the field of service in the U. S. army corps from 1913 to 1918 under the late Major-General William Crawford Gorgas, during which time he had extensive experience in the methods of eradicating mosquitoes and flies. He is enthusiastic about Doctor Gorgas and the continuation of his noble work by the Gorgas Memorial, and his writings concerning insects are authoritative. His article follows:

"Civilization has eliminated from modern communities the scourge of wild beasts, which in past centuries were a deadly menace to humanity. But civilization is just beginning to realize that its own development has given added impetus to the much deadlier menace of insect life. And that this danger is a real one science gives ample proof, pointing out that if present tendencies continue unchecked, within a very few centuries insect life will dominate the globe, and the human race will be exterminated.

"Of all the insects that afflict us there are none more common, or more deadly, than the ordinary house flies. They are found all over the world. The meanest hovels are always swarming with them, and no mansion or castle can screen tightly enough to keep them out. They are found everywhere, although science has proved that they transmit many of our deadliest diseases. It would be far safer to keep a tiger cub or a pet rattlesnake in the nursery with the baby than to have the house flies now swarming there. The tiger might stay good natured all its life and a rattlesnake never bites except when provoked. But a fly distributes filth every time it alights, and disease germs thrive in filth.

"Ninety per cent of the diseases of childhood are disorders of the digestive tract. The house fly is most efficiently equipped to carry the germs causing such diseases, and its life history shows that it spends much of its time in places where disease germs are likely to be found.

"The strangest part of the whole thing is that the house fly is just as unnecessary as any other household vermin and even more easily eradicated. The only difference is that the house fly is usually bred outside the house. But the housewives of the nation should awaken to the fact that their home standards of cleanliness, if applied to community housekeeping, would absolutely wipe out the house fly scourge.

"Flies live upon filth and can breed only in filth. They are enormously prolific, as are most insects, and under favorable conditions will increase with appalling rapidity. Fortunately they are short-lived and if prevented from breeding will very quickly disappear. But screening and swatting the adult flies are only make-shifts. Prevention of breeding is the only effective method of control."

To cook corn meal mush easily and without lumping put the corn meal, cold water, and salt together in the top of a double boiler. No stirring is necessary. For each cup of meal allow from 1 to 1½ level teaspoons of salt and from 3½ to 4½ cups of water. Cook half an hour or longer. Many people like corn meal cooked as long as four hours. Milk may be added in place of all or part of the water. Just before serving remove the top of the double boiler from the lower part and boil the mush for 2 or 3 minutes.

Says Old Timers, Playing Today, Would Score 75 Homers a Season

COLUMBIA, S. C. (AP)—If some of the hard hitters in baseball of the olden days were now playing in their prime, under conditions today, the home-run record of Babe Ruth, would never stand. So thinks Gabby Street, Walter Johnson's battery mate for six years and now manager of the Columbia South Atlantic association team.

"If Nap Lajoie, Sam Crawford, Ed Delehanty and Buck Freeman, for example, were playing now," he says, "we would see a home run record of 75 a season, I believe.

"They now have the lively ball. I honestly think the quartet I have named, playing with that ball and facing pitchers forbidden to use freak deliveries—the spit ball, the shine ball, the emery ball, all of which the old batters had to meet—would set records that would make the best of this generation look ordinary.

"Even the playing fields favor the batsmen. They are now surrounded by seats on all sides. It used to be that the bleachers and grand-stands were on the side lines, with a wide open territory to the back, in which fields could range unhampered.

"We used to play for blood," Street recalls. "But high salaries, even for mediocre players, have made the game more gentle—nothing but a financial proposition. And the game's not as fast as it was in the old days, in my opinion.

"There is a whole lot more of this 'excuse me, please' stuff and 'Alphonse and Gaston' behavior now than there used to be. But you can't blame the players. They've got to take care of themselves. They simply can't afford, as a business matter, to take unnecessary chances by roughing it up, with the prospects of cutting short their days in the game."

Street, a native of Huntsville, Ala., began playing professional ball in 1902 with Hopkinsville, Ky. Although not quite 18, he went to Cincinnati in 1904 and played through the next year. After a year's seasoning with San Francisco, Gabby joined Washington, where he remained until 1912, when he donned a New York Yankee uniform. Since he left the major league he has been playing with and managing minor leagues.

Loin or rib chops of lamb are not large but they should show good full "eyes" of lean with a border of fat. Similar cuts of mutton have the same general appearance but are larger. Legs of both lamb and mutton should be plump without much length of shank.

Mildew spots are growths of molds on fabrics that have remained damp for a time. If allowed to continue, the fibres of the material will be attacked and destroyed. The spots must be treated when fresh if injury is to be avoided. Soap and water, followed by drying in the sun, often will be sufficient. Sour milk, lemon juice, and javelle water sometimes may be used on white, washable materials, but the last never should be used on silk or wool.
