Friend on next street: "Hello, Smith, I hear you have a young sister over at your house?"
Smith: "Great Scott! Can you hear him that far?"

Has anyone dared to suggest a mascot dog for Elgin? We have been thinking for a long time that the Peckin' know would do nicely.

By stuffing the drawers with unfinished work, some fellows manage to keep their desks tops clean and "business like."

The astonishing thing about Eve is that she landed the first man so quickly without a porch swing.

"But during those joyful festivities" said the smiling Sunday-school superintendent, "there was one I regret to say, who took no interest whatever in the proceedings, and utterly refused to participate in the general cycling. He was not moved by the happiness of the father at the return of his wayward son, and finally refused to unite in the merry-making. Can any one of you tell who this was?"
"Yes, sir," said Willie. "The fattest calf."

"Did that patent medicine you bought cure your aunt?"
"Merely, no! On reading the circular that was wrapped around the bottle she got two more diseases."

"My father died of water on the brain."
"How is he?"
"Came of ice fell on his head."

Still, if everybody had to work for a living, there would be nobody to watch the men waiter.

How is it that complaining women always manage to marry forbearing men?

AT THE THEATERS

Warner Oland In Picture At Colonial

Warner Oland, long recognized as one of the greatest character actors of the screen, has usually been cast as the villain of the piece. In "Don Juan" with John Barrymore, he played the part of the evil brother of Lucrecia Borgia. In "A Million Bids," with Lucretia Castle, he was cast as the rich man who bargained and finally paid a million to the mother of the girl he married.

But no one has known the possibilities for appearing but tender and heart-warming comedy possessed by Warner Oland, until he has seen him as W. Bradberry, in the picture of "What Happened to Father." W. Bradberry, henpecked, meek, harboring a secret hobby, which is his final undoing, is a characterization that stands alone. It is impossible in itself, and suggests the splendid things in store for the motion picture public from the versatile genius of Warner Oland.

"What Happened to Father," with Warner Oland, a Warner Bros. production, directed by John G. Adolfi, is showing for the last time today at the Colonial theater.

Novelty Is Uppermost In "Time to Love"

While motion picture producers have been searching frantically for new comedy lines, Raymond Griffith, the high hat comedian, has gone out, collared, two and put the both into one picture.

The result is "Time to Love," which opened at the Star theater yesterday. Simply stated, it is Griffith's funniest comedy. He has never been better.

In it, Griffith has taken such an abstract thing as sadism and such a very real thing as four captive balloons and combined them in a hilarious, thrilling production that runs from light comedy, through farce, burlesque and pure romance, to the broadest of slapstick. It is a mixture, but the romance and the star's extraordinary sense of comedy carry it along and knit it tightly into the most laugh-provoking farce that has flashed on the Star screen in some months.

Griffith plays with the snick idea gently. His sweetheart believes in spirits, so, honor-bound never to see her again, he reappears as a spirit. There are a score of laughs in this part of the picture, but when he and the girl, picture their pursuers, get carried up in a balloon that is being shot at by soldiers on the ground, the laughs become rare. And, between each one there's a third or course. Ray reaches terra firma but before doing so, the audience has given him up at least a dozen times.

A new player appears as his heroine. She is Vera Vornova, who was brought to Hollywood from Russia after a short career in European pictures. She proves a welcome addition to the American screen. William Powell, as veteran performer as Miss Vornova is new, exciting villainous Marquis de Dado, makes an excellent foil for Griffith's fun.

"Time to Love" a Pat comedy, and the latest news reel will be presented tonight for the last time. Tuesday brings Richard Dix in "Quickie."
