This week we are considering, in connection with the informative double, situations which are of a more difficult character than those that usually arise. Two hands are given each day and the answers are published the next day.

Both of these hands are held by North; South (Dealer) has passed, and West has bid one No Trump. What should North declare?

No. 1. North should pass. His hand contains five high cards likely to take tricks and is what would be called a borderline double in the most advantageous position North is sitting over the player who has bid No Trump, which is the vantage position; but that player was not the Dealer. The Dealer (North's partner) has shown a hand not strong enough for an initial bid; it may be a lone. With a passing South and North's moderate strength, there is practically no chance of making game; but with North sitting over a No Trump, there is good chance of saving game. It is therefore a case for a pass and not a double.

No. 2. North should double. There are three differences between the two hands. Difference A is that No. 2 has six high cards that probably will take tricks, whereas No. 1 has only five. Six is considered the requisite for a double in this position. Difference B is that No. 2 is much stronger in the Majors, being especially strong in Spades; whereas No. 1 has more moderate Spades strength. No. 2 has four Hearts, whereas No. 1 has but three. No. 2 offers a reasonable chance for a Major game if South have length in either Major; No. 1 offers little such probability. Difference C is that No. 2 contains two Ten's both in combinations with which they are apt to be useful; No. 1 contains no Ten.

Today's hands are held by East; South (Dealer) has bid one No Trump, West and North have passed, and the question is: What should East declare?

"If I Only Had the Necessary Capital!"

How often do you hear that when a business opportunity presents itself to one of your acquaintances? How often is "lack of capital" given as the reason for a business failure, for inability to "get ahead" financially?

The times are not infrequent when a man has borrowed to the limit of his credit and lacks just a comparatively small amount of capital to take advantage of some business opportunity.

Then he can appreciate the importance of building a reserve fund, of preparing in advance for the opportunities that are certain to come—of preparing for the business reverses that are possible in every business.

A reserve in your business can be more than a protection — it is an investment earning a good interest rate through Certificates of Deposit. Your banker will gladly discuss how it may be started.
