AT THE THEATERS

William Haines' New Film Is One Long Laugh

Probably every golfer has a different way of playing golf.

Certainly every comedian has a different way of making laughs—but the finest example of "different" entertainment—and golf is concerned in it—is at the Star theater tonight, in "Spring Fever," William Haines' new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle.

"Spring Fever" is one long, loud laugh. It starts when Haines, as the shipping clerk, is discovered by the boss to be a golf expert. It runs through his trials and tribulations when the boss takes him to the country club, introduces him as a young millionaire, and proceeds to boast him as a coming champion. Cupid takes a hand and so does a rival for the lady of his choice. Then things happen—and how!

The plot is startlingly original, and time-honored methods of gaining laughs are conspicuous by their absence. They don't seem to be needed with Haines.

There are a few thrills in the picture, too—and a great deal of clever golf stuff, all the way from exposition of trick shots to straight playing, and in between there are some hilarious parodies on the grand old Scotch game that would make even the austere inventor of golf roar with hilarity were he here today.

Joan Crawford makes a charming heroine in the new picture, and the cast is a remarkably chosen one. George Fawcett appears as the golfing boss, and Edward Earle as Haines' rival, the golf champion. George K. Arthur and Lee Moran contribute the character comedy roles, and both give good accounts of themselves in hilarious bits.

Throughout the entire 9000 feet of film, Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky are in constant pursuit of their own dream of happiness achieved in their own manner and in their own sphere of life, and through a constantly rising tempo of thrills and dramatic climaxes, they finally attain their desire.

From the first, hundred feet of film where the gay and carefree atmosphere of the romantic little Italian circus is established, to the last fadeout where Mr. Colman and Miss Banky, their struggles forgotten, are back in the atmosphere they love—the picture was made as a blend of high comedy and grim tragedy.

A hair-raising balloon ascension and parachute jump by Vilma Banky clutches the audience at the start of the picture and holds them through a double murder by Count Casati and an amazing rough and tumble fight between Mr. Colman (as Tito, the clown) and the Count which ends in the death of the latter when he falls a thousand feet from the window of his hotel room into the sea below. At Tito, following the death of the Count, attempts to escape from the hotel in the Count's cloak, he is apparently apprehended by secret police. Thinking he is facing the guillotine, he finds instead that the old king has died and that he, the clown, must, to save his life, take the place of the prince who has been killed.

From then on the romantic adventure takes an entirely new trend and the camera follows Tito into the strange and startling happenings at the court of the dead king, where he faces death and betrayal at every turn. At the very start he has proved to himself that a clown may not be a king, nor a king a clown. The outward semblance may be there, clothes and posture may be acquired, but the real man can only be happy in the activities he loves. For himself, the life of the circus and the love of Bianca (Vilma Banky) are all that make life desirable.

Miserable then, in his new-found glamour, Tito constantly seeks a way out. Fate and chance supply his great opportunity through Bianca, who believing her lover slain, leaves the circus and comes to the capital city to kill the prince, the man she thinks Tito to be.

There is a tense moment when Bianca waits, pistol in hand, for the royal procession to pass her hiding place that she might shoot the prince. Foiled by circumstances as she is about to pull the trigger she finds herself thrown into prison and facing a life term for her attempt. Rescued from her cell and clothed in an alluring gown by the chancellor, Bianca comes alone at night to the bedroom of the prince to achieve her revenge. The denouement of the story, with the clown and the circus girl escaping from the kingdom and returning to happiness in the life of the circus, is equally effective.

NORTH POWDER PERSONALS

NORTH POWDER (Special)—The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Weeks suffered the misfortune of having her finger cut off recently by a small hand saw which her little brother had. Mrs. Weeks heard the boy scream and ran to see what was the trouble and found the little girl hold her finger from pain.

Iva Bowers and Albert Talley were married Wednesday at the parsonage by Miss Blokland at Haines. They expect to make their home here.

Albert Hutchinson and family are leaving for Oakland, Cal., soon. They sold their household furniture to Paul Dahlstrom.

Lelah McGrath, W. A. Hudelson and Floss Pearson were Baker visitors Saturday.

Eathel Forsstrom and son, Bud-die, were La Grande visitors Friday.
