Pan-American Conference May Prove Failure

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 5 (AP)—Commenting editorially on the Nicaraguan situation, El Universal today doubts whether the Pan-American conference will be a success and sees the possibility that President Coolidge may cancel his trip to Havana unless fighting is stopped in Nicaragua because Latin American opinion is already unfriendly on the subject.

After reviewing American editorial opinion in regard to the happenings occurring on the eve of the Pan-American congress, the paper finds that the campaign against the rebel General Sanjilao, is unpopular in the United States. It regrets that consternation in the United States is only due to the fact that several marines were killed in the last combats.

of an American business firm, the general declared.

Anxious to Kill—Sandino, described himself in a proclamation, a copy of which has been sent marine corps headquarters as "Augusta Caesar Sandino, an Indian, blood-thirsty and cruel and anxious to kill some Americans." It was said at the headquarters.

He is about 25 years old and has been convicted of a violent crime in Mazaya, marine corps records say. He escaped into Mexico after his conviction and joined Villa and was a member of that raiding party at Columbus, N. M.

Marine corps reports say that he carried numerous flags, all with a black and red background with skull and crossbones worked into the red and black. He has trumpeters who worry marine patrols by sounding regular army calls close to encampments, often falling in ready for action by sounding "to arms" almost under the marines' tents. The young bandit had carried the wholesome respect of the men who are trying to capture him, marine officers say. He has unusual power over the illiterate Nicaraguans and habitually makes long speeches to them.

Well Armed—According to marine corps intelligence officers, Sandino has 1,000 rifles and 1,000 rounds of ammunition for them. He has three machine guns and two right guns and there have been indications that he has several pieces of artillery.

Recently Sandino visited the Santa Clara mines, where he worked before the revolution, and took 2,000 pounds of dynamite, 1,000 feet of time fuse and a large quantity of fulminating caps. He has taken the dynamite, placed it in barrels and glass and placed the barrels in coverings. Placing the caps he gets a compact and exceedingly dangerous bomb which his follower are said to throw with unusual skill. The major portion of those wounded in the recent battles were hit by particles from this type of bomb.

MILK SUPPLY REGULATION QUESTION UP

produce milk sold in the city, regardless of location, or the alternative of barring the sale of uninspected milk within the city limits.

A recent state supreme court decision defines this right and gives the city full authority to regulate the sale of milk as far as cleanliness of the milk and dairies are concerned.

It provides for an annual license fee on a sliding scale, the small producers paying a small amount, and the large producers a proportionate sum. An inspection must take place before a license is issued and, according to the ordinance, no milk can be sold in the city limits from unlicensed and uninspected cows.

Provides for Inspector—It provides that a city inspector shall inspect all licensed herds or cows several times each year, probably monthly. This inspector would work from the city health office.

After the ordinance was read, a general discussion followed and the commission asked numerous questions of the dairymen and creamery men present. R. E. Tyler, of the Blue Mountain creamery, declared that the creameries are already living up to the provisions as they are under state inspection. Several producers present declared that the ordinance would be beneficial, would not work hardships upon any producers—whether large or small—and would assure the city of clean milk. One man declared that half of the milk sold in the city is inspected and added that some of the milk sold and consumed by children, is "rotten" and unfit for human consumption.

The members of the dairymen's association pointed out that their object is to supply the entire city with clean, wholesome milk and all present seemed in favor of the ordinance.

Suggests $1 a Cow—It was pointed out that the state inspector is only able to come here about once every 18 months and then is able to inspect only about half of the herds of such cows.

The commission declared that the big problem to it is the question of finances. Commissioner Playe suggested a fee of $1 a cow for producers and most opinions expressed were that this would provide enough money to pay an inspector and take care of other expenses.

To Get More Data—City Manager Crews was authorized to write to other cities in the northwest and to state officials to learn more about milk regulation in other cities and to report at next Wednesday night's meeting. With this action, the matter was held over for a week. The dairymen were asked to submit names of men whom they would recommend for the position of inspector and they agreed to have a list ready next week.

During the discussion several estimates were made concerning the supply of producers, ranging from 10 to 15, and it was estimated that it takes 1,300 cows to supply La Grande with milk.

It takes courage to stay in any business.

Farm Pointers

Cows in herd-improvement association of the country number about 400,000 and give an average of about 7,500 pounds of milk annually. The ordinary cow gives about 4,500 pounds. The difference is not a result of monthly testing itself, but the practice usually results in increased average yields in the herds because it reveals to the farmer the profitable high-production cows and is a guide in culling, feeding, and breeding.

It is wise to make sure of the log rule to be used in scaling timber sold from the farm woodlot. The Doyle rule is in common use in the South, but it is not fair in its estimate of board feet in small and medium-sized saw logs. The Scribner rule is fairer and is used in the national forests. For small timber, such as second growth pine, the International log rule gives volumes very close to that which can be sawed out under good methods. A log measuring 10 inches inside the bark at one end and 14 feet long would weigh 84 feet by the International rule and only 20 feet by the Doyle rule.

Adequate records are necessary to efficient management of any business. Many farmers, owing to a lack of proper records, do not know what returns they actually receive, nor how these compare with returns they should receive for their work and the use of their capital. Some are living on the interest of their capital, making small wages or none, and do not profit. Farm records may vary from the taking of an annual inventory to carrying the most complete and detailed system of cost accounts.
