NO 'SYNDICATE' BALL IN TRADE

President of the Boston Braves Says Two Players Worth $150,000

BOSTON, Jan. 12 (AP)—It is worth noting to the story that "syndicate" baseball brought recently to Boston from the New York Giants, President Emil F. Feltz of the Braves doesn't care.

"No man who is interested in any way with the Giants will be ready to work in the 'syndicate' he said in regard to the players that the Giants had been traded here to help build up a club which was selling down the coast.

He then pointed to the situation in which the New York club got Francis Magee, Boston's star catcher and outfielder Jimmy Slosser. It was talking as if it were a fact.

Feltz said he valued the pair at $150,000 and considered them worth half that to the Giants.

"I think and wish were to be sold to the Braves I would get $150,000 for them. That's their value to me and any statement such as that I have heard from New York that they're worth a $200,000 player, was traded for 125,000 worth of material is absurd. Why these players would be traded to any club other than the Braves is beyond me."
