Barnyard manure is low in phosphorus compared to its nitrogen and potassium content. Field trials in Oregon by the experiment station show marked increases in yield on soil where a phosphate fertilizer has been added to the manure. This can be best done by adding super phosphate to the manure as it is produced in the stable. A common practice is to scatter a small amount of the material behind each animal each day, thus insuring an even distribution of the phosphate.

Seed potatoes are treated before they begin to sprout for best success. This is particularly true when corrosive sublimate is used, as injury to the eyes might result if sprouting has commenced. The usual treatments are Semesan Bel, hot formaldehyde or corrosive sublimate. All are effective in control of scab and rhizoctonia fungi the experiment station, but corrosive sublimate gave the best results in the control of blackleg in 1927.

Barnyard manure ferments to a great extent with loss of nitrogen in the form of ammonia gas. Such losses of this valuable plant food nutrient can be cut down by the addition of hard plaster, or super phosphate to the manure. The calcium sulphate in these compounds combines with the ammonia to make a less volatile substance.

McKay Yellow Dent corn for silage has given the highest yields for the past three seasons at the experiment station at Corvallis. An early strain of Minnesota 12 or Golden Glow is good if the corn is to be hauled for poultry or other livestock. The college has a strain which has been grown here for many years and gives good yields of ear corn.

It takes skill to put a jelly roll together correctly. The basis is sponge cake baked in a thin sheet. When it is ready to be taken from the oven, spread a piece of waxed paper on the table, sprinkle powdered sugar on it, and slip the cake quickly out of the pan, top down, on the paper. It is necessary to work rapidly while the cake is still warm. Trim off the outside edges, spread with jelly or preserves, and roll in an outward motion. Wrap the waxed paper securely around the cake and tie it in place until the jelly roll is to be cut.

her home at the Park Tuesday. Guild Lay, who has been in Idaho for the past month returned to the Park a few days ago. Elva Vanorder is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Vanorder this week.

Let Nature
be your dietitian

HOW few of us have time to become dietetic experts! But all of us want our meals to be nourishing and healthful—to furnish all the food elements we need. Then why not follow Nature's advice?

Long before we heard of proteins, carbohydrates, mineral salts, Nature combined them—each in the right proportion—and gave us a perfect food—whole wheat.

Shredded Wheat is all of the wheat—all the food elements for energy and strength—plus all the bran of the whole wheat grain to keep your system healthy and clear.

With milk or cream and sugar, or with melted butter and salt, it is delightfully refreshing and nourishing. If you like a hot cereal, just pour on hot milk—there's no other hot breakfast so easy to serve.

Just start all your mornings with Shredded Wheat. Then you'll be giving your body the food it needs, in the way that Nature intended.
