HOOVER DRIVE IS GAINING HEADWAY

Important Developments Are Looked for in the Next Few Days

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7 (AP)—Definite developments in the Hoover drive for the republican presidential nomination are looked for in the next few days. Thus far the commerce secretary's standard has been borne by groups of friends, but pressure is increasing daily to have Mr. Hoover transfer it to his own hands. These friends, who are rapidly achieving unity, are being impurged to have him remove his candidacy from its present apparently involuntary stage to a voluntary one, but how much of that pressure is being passed on to the cabinet member is not evident.

Hoover Remains Silent

In the face of it all, Mr. Hoover adhered to his refusal to discuss politics, but within a week or so he is expected to decide one way or another. The approaching close of the period for filing candidacies in the Ohio primary provides the opportunity for him to step out in the open—and into a spirited battle for Ohio's 51 convention votes. There is talk about his name being entered in half a dozen or more approaching primaries, but there is nothing to indicate it is more than talk. Nevertheless, Hoover men are going over the ground and keeping abreast of all state developments, confident that the secretary will make a pronouncement soon.

Another who remains silent while his friends work for him with his knowledge and consent as he has expressed it, is Senator Reed, democrat, Missouri. It has been understood here, however, that he would support his candidacy for the democratic nomination in a Washington birthday address, but no confirmation has developed.

May Announce It Feb. 28

At Miami, Fla., last night former Gov. Frederick A. Gardner, of Missouri, said he would announce the senator's candidacy on Feb. 28, in St. Joseph, at the state democratic convention.

Gov. Al Smith's democratic friends have become active here with their eyes on the six votes which the District of Columbia will cast in the Houston convention.

Under the leadership of Charles W. Darr, an attorney, a Smith-for-president club has opened offices here. The club members plan an active campaign as do sponsors of a similar club formed at Clarendon, Va. nearby. It calls itself the Al Smith-for-President club of Northern Virginia.

Two Commandments Broken

To all ten commandments except two, the brain specialist said Hickman's response was normal. "To thou shalt not kill" the youth responded: "I killed Marian Parker because I was meant to be so. I was too long with details of the murder to care whether I was doing right or wrong?"

"To thou shalt not steal" he said, "well I wanted the money and that was the easiest way. I didn't care if it was against the law."

Hickman admitted, according to Dr. Mikels, that he knew kidnapping and murder were both "big crimes" punishable by death or long prison terms.

"He thoroughly appreciated the fact that he had constitutional rights but showed wanton disregard for the rights of others," said the expert witness.

"He had all normal brain functions except some blunted sensibility which may have been due to his early life or to his own choice of a life of crime."

Prosecution to Hurry

District Attorney Asa Keyes declared prior to the opening of court today that he expected to complete his case in quick order and that it might be in the jury's hands by late Thursday.

Judge J. J. Trabucco also said he expected the case to reach the 112 stage for final arguments by tomorrow. He has virtually completed his instructions for the jury. Unless the cross examination is lengthy, Keyes said, would complete the prosecution evidence today. The last state witness will be Percy M. Parker, father of the slain girl. Keyes estimated that probably brief rebuttal testimony would be heard early tomorrow. Each side will be allotted five hours for the argument before the jury.

Judge Trabucco yesterday laughed at threats said to have been made against him. However, special guards were assigned to watch over his court chambers and to accompany him to and from the courtroom.

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 7 (AP)—Rapidly diminishing excitement today followed yesterday's flurry which resulted from the closing of three Miami banks and brought optimistic statements from financiers and state banking officials. Some withdrawals were being made but the lines to teller's cages were not as long nor as insistent as those of yesterday.

State officials said they anticipated no more suspensions. Emergency funds had been received by practically every major institution in town. No accurate estimate of the total sum in cash made but bankers' unofficial guess ran from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000.

LIGHTING BROADWAY

MORE STATE HICKMAN IS NOT INSANE

Dr. Mikels had testified from a mass of notes taken during his examination of Hickman in his jail cell. "Are these all the notes you have taken," asked the defense attorney in cross examination.

Notes Taken Daily

"Oh, by no means," responded the witness as he handed out a bulky notebook. From this he read a day-by-day session-by-session analysis of Hickman's reactions in court. He declared that whenever the plea "not guilty by reason of insanity" had been mentioned in the courtroom, Hickman had showed interest.

When his mother took the witness stand Hickman forcibly suppressed his emotion but that "his face was a mass of gloom."

When his father was testifying, Hickman "looked disgusted" at the disclosures of the sordid family life of the Hickmans.

When Welby Hunt, his erstwhile companion in crime, appeared on the stand, Hickman's face wore a "smirk of disdain."

"Keen Interest"

When pictures of little Marian Parker's dismembered body were shown the juror, Hickman "displayed keen interest."

When prosecution alienist told of his findings minutely dissecting Hickman's mental reactions, Hickman was "scared to death."

Told to remove his coat and shirt for the "skin writing test," his reactions were normal.

When his confessions were read, he was "stolid" as though he were listening merely to a repetition of something he already knew well.

His searching inquiry of several hours, Dr. Mikels said, developed that the confessed murderer "had the sordid indifference of a wanton criminal." He traced this back to early boyhood with thefts of candy from stores. School boy love affairs as related to him by Hickman were quoted for the benefit of the jury by the alienist.

Two Commandments Broken

To all ten commandments except two, the brain specialist said Hickman's response was normal. "To thou shalt not kill" the youth responded: "I killed Marian Parker because I was meant to be so. I was too long with details of the murder to care whether I was doing right or wrong?"
