Bridge Pointers

By Milton O. Work

This is the fifteenth and last Auction Bridge article written for the novice and describing what may be called the "mechanics" of the game. Next Saturday a series on the bidding will start; it also is intended for the novice, and it will furnish valuable rudimentary information stated in the simplest manner. Today's article, as was promised, illustrates the method of score keeping, with explanatory scores.

The Game of Auction Bridge Chapter 13

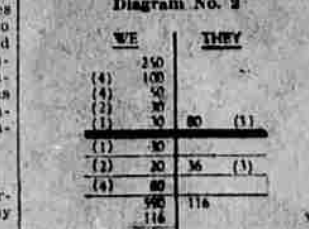

Diagram No. 1 shows the general form of a score sheet before any entry has been made thereon:

The left column under the head of "we" is the place in which the points of the scorer and his partner are entered; and the right column under the head of "they" is the place for the scores of the opponents of the scorer. Above the heavy horizontal line are entered the points scored for honors, penalties, slams, bonuses for over-tricks and the bonus for winning two games.

Diagram No. 2, which follows, shows a score sheet completed at the end of a rubber.

The deals which produced the scores represented by these entries will now be explained. The number of each deal is entered in parenthesis on the score sheet opposite the score of the deal in question. Of course, in keeping an actual score, no such entry would appear.

Deal No. 1. "We" make three No Trumps with three honors. Note the two 30's entered above and below the dark horizontal line. Also note the light line drawn under the 30 for tricks to indicate that "we" have won one game. Deal No. 2. "We" make two No Trumps, once again with three honors. Note the 20 under the line and the second 20 above. This does not entitle "we" to a game, so a line is not then drawn below the 20.

Deal No. 3. "They" make four Spades and have four honors in one hand. Note the 36 below the line and the 40 above. A second light line is then drawn to show the completion of the second game.

Deal No. 4. "We" bid four Hearts, are doubled and make five-odd. Note the 80 (five Hearts 40, doubled 80) below the line, 50 above the line for five honors divided between two hands, 100 above the line, 50 of which is for making a doubled contract, and 50 for making a trick in excess of the doubled contract, and 250 above the line for winning the second game of the rubber. It will be noted that "we's" scores aggregate 590, from which "they's" total 116 is subtracted, leaving a rubber of 474 for "we" which, if counting to the nearest hundred, would be a rubber of 500.
