NEA Milwaukee Bureau

Spring's in the air, or visitors at the Washington Park Zoo in Milwaukee would not yet have seen this little polar bear cub. On the warmest days the mother brings it out of the dark den where she has kept it hidden for about 14 weeks. So carefully does she guard the youngster between her powerful paws that zoo attendants have been unable to touch it.

ENTERPRISE PERSONALS

ENTERPRISE (Special)—At a meeting of the Isaak Walton league here it was decided to hold a banquet early in May to which members of the league, of Joseph, will be invited. The banquet will probably be in the nature of a fish fry and a suitable program will be prepared. Game Warden George Rodgers was present and read a paper written by an official of the U. S. biological survey describing a disease affecting rabbits, ground squirrels and some game animals and game birds. It is thought that this disease was prevalant in some sections of the country last fall and was responsible for the large number of dead grouse found by hunters and stock men during the late summer. Sportsmen are asked to report any future findings of this nature and if possible procure specimens for examination by authorities.

The state hatchery is now liberating the first lot of sockeye salmon from the holding ponds. The first fish were let out Tuesday and the gates will continue to be lowered for several days until the last of this lot has gone down into the river for their start on their long journey to the sea. Later in the season the chinook will be liberated. These number 5,000,000 and will be one of the biggest turnouts ever made in the history of the industry.

The boys of the high school will be entertained at a banquet in the near future by the members of the chamber of commerce, it was decided at a recent meeting of that body. S. H. Burleigh, T. E. Ratcliff and County Clerk D. H. Reavis were appointed a committee to have charge of the affair, which will probably be held at the high school building.

THE GARDEN

EVERYBODY LIKES PANSIES

There are few flower gardens without their pansies, one of the great favorites, known of old as Heartsease. The trend of present-day gardening has brought the whole tribe of pansies from the tiny Johnny jump up of our great grandmother's day to the modern giants into renewed favor. There is some criticism that pansies have been made too big, but there is no denying the fact that most gardeners place great value on size and the giant pansies are the favorite of the tribe even if the flowers are out of all proportion to the sizes of the plant and the giant types produce fewer flowers than the smaller sorts.

The trend toward smaller flowers is due to the spread of rock gardening and this has brought back the smaller pansies and their relatives, the violets, from many lands. The pansy, botanically, is the tricolored violet. Pansies of any type, giant or tiny, are easily raised from seed and the smallest garden may have a liberal supply at small cost and little labor. The chief factor of importance is the seed. Be sure to buy a good strain from a reliable seed house. A wide variety of strains and a wide selection of colors are offered.

The bedding or tufted pansies, hardier and sturdier than the giant pansies and with much greater freedom of bloom and a longer season, long popular with foreign gardeners, are making their way rapidly in American gardens. They are also known as violas and have much the same range of colors as the pansies. They have fine self-colors which make them excellent bedding material.

Pansies of all varieties are best raised from seed in cool weather, sowing in April as soon as the ground is workable and seeing to it that they have a continuous supply of moisture. Cover an eighth of an inch. The seed comes up in about 12 days. They need rich soil. It is a mistake to plant them in deep shades. They flourish best in open spaces with plenty of air and light. In shade they make long straggling growth with fewer blooms.

"FANCY AND PLAIN" RULE RESERVE THIS SEASON

PARIS (AP)—Francy jackets and plain dresses are a form of sprin fashion which reverses last year's dictum of fancy dresses and plain coats. Many dressmakers show short silk jackets made of printed materials. Crepe de chine, satin and taffeta are used, usually in black with small, brought flower designs, for wear with dresses of black or plain color.

HEALTH

THE HEART OF MIDDLE LIFE

Heart disease is responsible for twice as many deaths as any other disease. In 1926 the death rate from heart disorders increased from 186 to 199 per 100,000 population in the United States. Practically one person out of every 500 dies of some form of heart disease. No other cause of death is mounting with comparable rapidity. Since very few persons under 40 years of age die with heart disease, and since both the heavy death rates and the larger populations are in the younger years, the heavy heart disease rate means that the chance is very great that any man over 40 will pass away from this disease.

Important among the causes of heart trouble are the after-effects of the infectious diseases. Most of the ground-work for heart disease is laid down in childhood, and in our efforts at prevention we must concentrate on the children of school age and guard against the more common infectious diseases.

When young adults are systematically examined, as is now done on entrance to college, it is found that a large proportion have heart murmurs. These subjects deny that they have ever had heart trouble or that they have any symptoms of it at the time of the examination. When closely questioned they tell of having had rheumatism, St. Vitus' dance, or some eruptive disease, but they thought recovery had been complete.

Any of the following symptoms should call for a medical examination, but it does not necessarily follow that you have heart disease because you have these symptoms:

Shortness of breath—inability to get one's second wind as rapidly as the average person.

Swelling of the ankles—particularly if the ankle "pits" on pressure. This swelling is more prone to appear in the evening.

Rapid, palpitating, or thumping heart. These symptoms may or may not be an evidence of heart trouble—they may arise from nervousness or indigestion, but they should be investigated.

Pain in the region of the heart—especially if it is severe and "vice-like." In persons over 45 years of age this may indicate the coming of angina pectoris.

The periodic medical examination is an essential in the campaign to lessen the death rate from heart disease. The only detection of the conditions causing heart trouble would prevent the later appearance of the disorder. A carefully planned regime for those already afflicted will add to their efficiency and prolong life—in fact, with reasonable care people with heart disease can live just about as long as those with sound hearts. Then, too, there are many people who are miserable, unhappy, and inefficient through fear of heart trouble when an examination would disclose the fact that the heart is sound.
