INSTEAD OF SLEEP

Du Pont, the chemist, is trying to find something to take the place of sleep, and this leads us to arise and ask, "Did he ever try courting a girl?"

* * *

Angry Customer: "Look here, waiter, I've just found this trouser button in my soup."

Waiter: (With a beaming smile): "Oh, thank you sir, I couldn't think what had become of it."

* * *

A little girl, three years of age, came into the house crying. "I fell down," she exclaimed. Her father asked her what caused her to fall. "I was running," she replied, "and hit my foot on a brick." Her father said, "Where was the brick, Velma?" Velma stopped crying, looked at her father in disgust, then said, "In front of me, of course."

Here's one to paste on your desk:

It is easy to fool yourself. It is more difficult to fool the people you work for. It is still more difficult to fool the people you work with and it is almost impossible to fool the people who work under you.

"I still have my baby dress, but it's too long to wear now."

Attractive flowers can be made from scraps of velvet by pasting green tissue paper on the back and cutting large petal-shaped pieces from them. Five of these can be grouped around an artificial center from an old flower. Green stems and bud calyxes can be bought at any millinery shop to attach.

AT THE THEATERS

"Lady Raffles" Coming To Star Tuesday

"Lady Raffles," the Columbia Pictures production which will be shown at the Star theater Tuesday and Wednesday is a skillfully developed drama of the adventures which befall a clever young woman whose life is a mystery. It is a picture of surprises and queer twists in which strategy and apt maneuvering hold the interest. The plot revolves around a valuable necklace, which changes hands with the dexterity displayed by sleight-of-hand performers, and the awakening of love in the heart of the heroine. Estelle Taylor has a tricky role which she handles in masterly style displaying the touch of an artist. Miss Taylor is supported by a strong cast including Roland Drew, Lilyan Tashman, Ernest Hilliard and Winifred Landis. The picture was directed by R. William Neil.

"Helen Of Troy" Showing At The Arcade

We can, by a far stretch of the imagination, see President Coolidge harassed by servant problems or vexed because he is served herring twice in succession.

We can even imagine the Prince of Wales disgruntled because the laundry hasn't come back or because his shirt studs are missing.

So says Carey Wilson, producer of First National's "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," the picture which opens at the Arcade theater today for a two-day run.

But, he adds, even the most vivid imagination can hardly picture the stately heroes of mythology fretting over domestic problems. And therein, he points out, lies much of the humor and charm of John Erskine's "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," the brilliant novel on which the picture is based.

The beautiful Helen, having returned home after her elopement with Paris, frets about the odd ideas of her high-minded daughter as does any flapper's mother of today.

Menelaos, her not-to-intelligent husband, is constantly in a turmoil over the changing fashions of the world and eternally finds himself in a wrath because his family retainers—in common with so many cherished servants of today—insist upon advising him upon personal affairs.

"The Private Life of Helen of Troy" as a picture, retains all the humor and satire of the book. Maria Corda, Lewis Stone and Ricardo Cortez share honors in the three featured roles.

She Helped Ford To Riches

Mrs. Samuel Ford, aunt of Henry Ford, now lives quietly in Detroit. When Ford was a boy he frequently went to her for a dollar or two to help develop some mechanical idea with which he was tinkering. He got it, and maybe that's why she is said to be his favorite aunt.

HEALTH

THE LESSON ON GOITER
By B. Homer Junkin, M. D.,
Idaho Falls, Idaho
Member Gorgas Memorial

Many classifications of goiter, a disease of the thyroid gland, have been made but division into two great heads, toxic and non-toxic is ample. By the toxic type we refer to the kind which produces symptoms as a result of poison going into the blood stream while the non-toxic type produces symptoms from direct pressure.

In the toxic goiter we find a great variety of symptoms. Many times the young schoolgirl shows an unusual amount of activity with a seemingly untiring energy. Again the patient may seek medical advice because of extreme nervousness. In other patients the heart beats too fast and there is shortness of breath. Some patients feel a peculiar sensation of warmth over the body and excessive perspiration on certain areas of the skin surfaces. Some complain of the knees going out from under them. Practically all lose weight and experience a general weakness. The protruding of the eyes is one of the typical objective symptoms of one of the toxic types. There are also certain digestive disturbances, such as diarrhoea, nausea, and vomiting.

The non-toxic goiter usually is manifest early in life by a noticeable enlargement of the gland. It frequently produces an unsightly mass disfiguring the individual to the extent that the removal of the goiter is desirable.

As in most diseases, there are many causes of goiter. The enlargement at the time of puberty and during pregnancy is a normal condition and no occasion for alarm. The goiter occurring in certain localities is different. Here there is a lack of iodine in the water and soil, and the gland is overworked in its attempt to supply it, resulting in the production of goiter. Focal infections in the teeth, tonsils, and accessory sinuses of the nose may be a cause. New growths, such as simple and malignant tumors, may affect this gland and cause enlargement.

In the case of goiter produced by the deficiency or absence of iodine in a locality, one would naturally deduce that this type could be cured by taking it in food or water. It has been found, however, that the use of iodine in some cases may light up serious over-activity in glands ordinarily harmless. Perhaps the routine use of iodine should be limited to taking it as a preventive measure in localities where goiter is prevalent.

In preparation of the toxic type of patient for operation, iodine is valuable. Here it exerts an almost dynamic action. The profound nervous state, together with the extreme toxic condition, is rapidly changed, making surgery practicable and safe.

Perhaps the first step to be taken in the treatment of this common disease is an early examination, when an enlargement of the gland is noticed or when symptoms as described, occur. Certain of the endemic goiters will yield to careful medical treatment. X-ray treatment of the toxic forms has given very pleasing results. Surgery has no doubt opened a quick, safe, and satisfactory way for the relief and cure of this common and troublesome disease.

Now you ask: "Suppose you don't treat the disease at all, what then?" The patient with a deeply bronzed skin tightly drawn over the emaciated body, the veins prominent in neck and forehead, propped up in bed gasping for breath, is the altogether too frequent picture resulting from the rapidly degenerating heart. Then too many cases of kidney diseases causing death are traceable to the diseased thyroid. A goiter too long neglected leaves the individual permanently crippled with heart, kidney, and other lesions. It should receive early attention and thus avoid serious consequences which follow in its wake.

ELECTRIFY RURAL INDIA

CALCUTTA (AP)—Villages and farms within a radius of ten miles of the main centers of electric power distribution will be supplied with power lines for irrigation purposes at the expense of the Mysore government as part of a program for electrifying rural India. The demand for electric irrigation pumps has suddenly increased as a result, and the government has a lengthy waiting list of applicants.

These are dangerous days. A man never knows when he goes home early whether or not the lawn mower is going to be in the front yard.

Give Us a Bigger Navy!

The United States Navy has just detailed Lieut. Comm. P. V. H. Weems to teach Col. Lindbergh to navigate. Now we advocate a commission be appointed to teach General Sandino how to dodge. . . . And we used to think the firemen on an oil-burning locomotive had a soft job. . . . Too bad we hadn't a navy wren Christopher Columbus set out to discover us. A maritime sub-commission might have been assigned to show the gentleman how to furl a sail.

Two young men of Lynn, Mass., told police they had been forced to walk home after taking a couple of young ladies out for a ride. The boys shouldn't take such chances.
