Henry Wallace Phillips wrote a story about Red Saunders, a minister, who found himself broke in a strange town. Red borrowed the money and bet it on a short game, saying, "I know all about this game."

The money disappeared at the first manipulation. "I thought you knew all about the game," chided the partner.

"I do," retorted Red, "it always comes out that way."

"Got any gin?"

"Whaddya want with it?"

"To make some ginger ale."

"I have an old relic," said the doctor this morning, "and my wife has one, as well; neither of which seems to be of any value, however. Mine is an automobile, and my wife's is a hat; both purchased last year."

She—"Thank you, I look even worse in white."

AT THE THEATERS

"Wife's Relations" And Vaudeville Come

Columbia has produced another winner in "The Wife's Relations," a hilarious comedy of the complications of married life. The plot revolves around a young inventor and his marriage to a beautiful heiress, who has run away from home and become an elevator operator in order to avoid a union with a man, who is distasteful to her. Into the action are introduced a cross-eyed cook, a penniless actor, an unknown author and an artist of uncertain merit. They all struggle along together on the estate of the heiress's former sweetheart. The wife's parents visit their son-in-law and are resolved in great style by the versatile quartet, who play chauffeur, ladies' maid, footman, butler and cook. They are making a strong impression when the former lover returns and then the fun begins. Shirley Mason gives an excellent portrayal of a wayward girl, who always gets her own way. Gaston Glass makes an ideal husband and struggling inventor. Ren Turpin holds the center of the stage with his antics and Arthur Rankin keeps the audience in good humor with his impersonations as a maid.

No Dull Minutes In "Lady Raffles" At the Star

A clever girl of mystery, who brings two society thieves to justice, is the title role in "Lady Raffles," the Columbia production on the screen at the Star theater today and Wednesday. The cast is headed by Estelle Taylor with such players as Roland Drew, Lilyan Tashman, Ernest Hilliard and Winifred Landis in the support.

The action is swift, resorting to strategy and clever ruses which offer strong audience appeal. A pretty love interest is interwoven in the plot with here and there a touch of pathos to heighten the dramatic effect.

There are moments of breathless suspense as Lady Raffles makes daring escapes and turns up again in the most unexpected places. In many instances the picture reminds one of a slight-of-hand performance, so cleverly is the disappearance and reappearance worked.

To B. William Neil goes great credit for the clever way in which he has handled the direction of the picture.

The plot revolves around a diamond necklace and the daring attempts of a pair of society crooks to secure it and place the blame on Lady Raffles. The latter, more clever than the pair, is always three leaps ahead of them and in the end completely turns the tables.

Estelle Taylor does some exceptionally fine work in the title role. She runs the gamut of emotions, moving her audience to laughter, tears or sighs as she passes through the various situations which blend into this unusual production.

You'll like "Lady Raffles." It's a clean, wholesome picture, told in a logical and probable manner. The society background furnishes the means of introducing beautiful scenes, gorgeous sets and picturesque locations.

HEALTH

BLOOD PRESSURE AND COMMON SENSE
 (By Nathan S. Davis, III, M. D., Chicago.)

Member Gorgas Memorial

What is blood pressure? It is a measure of the hydraulic pressure in the blood vessels in terms of the height to which a column of mercury must be raised in order to shut blood flow through the arteries off completely. The systolic blood pressure, which is that commonly spoken of, is a measure of the maximum pressure in the arteries due to contractions of the heart. The diastolic pressure is the pressure in the arteries between contractions of the heart.

What is normal blood pressure? The consensus of opinion is that in the United States a systolic blood pressure of from 110 to 150 is normal throughout adult life, providing the diastolic pressure is about two-thirds of the systolic. Blood pressure constantly above 150 are abnormal; many individuals may have pressures above that point for emotional or physical strain, with no disease condition present. The first examination by a physician, especially in connection with insurance examinations, quite frequently causes an increase in heart rate and in blood pressure.

CAMPUS QUEEN is the title role Miss Mary Elizabeth McFadden of Middleport, N. Y., by her fellow students at the Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh. She plans to go on the stage after graduating next June.

Abnormal blood pressures, high or low, are symptoms of disease or of abnormal digestion and assimilation and not diseases of themselves. High blood pressures are much more to be feared than low because they signify disorders regarding which less is known.

Low blood pressures are met with in debilitating diseases (tuberculosis, cancer, anemia, certain forms of kidney disease, rarely in heart disease), and in certain forms of chronic bowel trouble.

High blood pressure is not due to kidney disease, although the same thing that causes high blood pressure often also causes kidney disease. It is commonly found in heart disease, where it may be necessary to compensate for damage to heart valves, a good sign rather than a bad one. The high blood pressures found in those having toxic colitis is probably due, in part at least, to the rapid heart rate found in that disease. Increased viscosity of the blood may at times be a cause. The most common cause is probably an increased resistance in the circulation due to narrowing of the blood vessels from a spasm or by the contraction of scar tissue in the vessel walls.

Heredity and familial habits of eating and living, so difficult to differentiate between, appear to be factors of importance. It is essential that children of individuals with high blood pressure be examined at regular intervals in order that any may be learned about the onset of this symptom and its cause.

Excessive use of meats, salt and condiments in the diet, especially if there is a tendency to constipation, and overeating in general are also important factors.

Successful treatment of abnormal blood pressures, which we must remember are only symptoms, must depend on the success with which the cause can be treated. Until the causes are better known, it must be systematic. Rest, relaxation, avoidance of great physical and mental strain are of utmost importance. A moderate amount of exercise, never violent, is desirable.

A well-balanced diet, containing the minimum amount of meat, fish, eggs and cheese, an abundance of fruits and vegetables, especially greens, and a minimum of salt, tea, coffee and alcoholic beverages, has been found beneficial. The removal of all possible foci of infection is indicated.

Various drugs, chemicals, and organ extracts have been tried in the management of pathological blood pressures. Some seem to have a distinctly beneficial effect both on the subjective symptoms and on the height of the blood pressure. However, it is improbable that any single remedy will ever be found that will really cure either high or low blood
