Mrs. Knapp Suffers Nervous Collapse

ALBANY, N. Y., May 25 (AP)—Mrs. Florence S. Knapp, found guilty of grand larceny by a jury in Albany county supreme court Saturday, was suffering from a nervous collapse today.

A consultation of physicians was called to determine when she could leave Albany for the three months rest recommended by her doctor.

Dr. A. R. Davison said she was resting as comfortably as could be expected.

National Banks File Test Suit

PORTLAND, Ore., May 24 (AP)—Suits of several national banks of Portland against the sheriff of Multnomah county, whereby the banks challenge the right of the state to tax their capital stock at the present rate, while capital stock is employed in the state gone free, was scheduled to open late today in Federal Judge Brown's court. Suits for the banks have called as witnesses almost 100 bankers, pawnbrokers, loan associations and others who employ capital in a fashion similar to banking practices.

The man who leads on the job cheats himself as well as his employer.

No Chalk Lines Must Prevent Customer Satisfaction

Maeterlink once told a story about an ant that actually starved rather than cross an imaginary chalk line circle drawn about it.

We have never observed the habits of ants very carefully, so cannot vouch for the story, but we do know that there are many "chalk lines" in the management of a retail store that hinder the perfect accomplishment of customer-satisfaction.

Rules, of course, are essential, but it is astonishing how much can be done when two people are honestly trying to accomplish the same end. The next time you have a problem that seems a bit out of the ordinary, or requires something special in the way of service, talk to our manager about it. Often he can suggest a way out of the difficulty.

We don't want the chalk line of "it never has been done" to become a barrier between ourselves and our customers.
