BLESSED ARE THE STEADFAST: Blessed are they that keep judgment, and he that doeth righteousness at all times. Psalm 105:3.

Politics would be both respectable and useful if it weren't for politics.

Illustrated Science and Mechanics "omitted the publication of its May issue as a result of mechanical difficulties which were unforeseen." Physician, heal thyself! But if this had happened to The Modern Priscilla—oh, well, you know how women are!

Major Young of the aeronautics division of the Department of Commerce urges any states that have not already done so to enact laws requiring examination and licensing of airplanes and pilots before allowing them to fly. Eighty per cent of all the privately owned planes in the country are already subject to federal inspection and regulation because they fly across state boundaries or because their owners voluntarily follow the federal law. The other 20 per cent, however, go unregulated and do a good deal of harm both to their own victims and to the cause of aviation. At present it is possible in a good many of the states for any individual with the money and inclination to go out and buy himself a second-hand plane, take a few lessons and then go up in the air. In too many cases the planes are worn out or never were well built. Accidents, many of them fatal, are the inevitable result. The people in the plane may be paying the price of their folly, but the unsuspecting victims on the ground ought to be protected from this danger. It is essential that official supervision of a thorough sort be extended to every aircraft and every flyer.

BUILT ON HEROISM

Heroism is one of the oldest of human virtues. And, in spite of the protection which our modern civilization throws about the individual, it is still one of the race's greatest assets. It is an useful now as it was in the days of the caveman.

That thought is provoked by reading of the death of Dr. Hideyo Noguchi, Japanese scientist in the service of the Rockefeller Foundation, who recently died of yellow fever in the town of Accra, West Africa. Dr. Noguchi was one of the world's authorities on yellow fever, and he gave his life in a valiant effort to eradicate it from the face of the globe. There are few finer stories in medical annals.

After Gorgas succeeded in conquering yellow fever in the West Indies and Panama, it was hoped that the disease could be wiped out everywhere. But in South America the disease is of a different type than in those places; and in Africa there is still a third type, more puzzling and more deadly than either of the others.

Dr. Noguchi first went to South America. He made a brilliant record there, overcoming amazing physical handicaps. Then, last fall, he sailed for West Africa to tackle the African variety of yellow fever. He had not gone far with his work before he himself had contracted the disease.

Instead of dropping his work and devoting his efforts to cure himself, Dr. Noguchi kept at work. He used himself as a laboratory specimen, inoculating monkeys with his own blood and examining their bodies after they died. For a time it seemed that he would ultimately recover; then, just as he was convalescing, he suffered an unexpected relapse and died.

Heroism of that kind is beyond praise. There were no cheering throngs there in the little coast town; there was not even the soldier's stimulus of comrades sharing the same fate. Dr. Noguchi was by himself. But he kept on working, in the very face of death; and, before he died, he succeeded in isolating the germ of African yellow fever.

Some day Africa will be as free of yellow fever as the Panama Canal zone now is. And most of the credit will go to the little Japanese doctor who gave his life to the task of conquering the malady. People will be able to live in security and comfort in Africa because of Dr. Noguchi's heroism.

ENTREPRISE. (Special) — The Fourth of July celebration committee is busy this week mailing out advertising literature to all parts of the Inland Empire and expect to give the celebration the most publicity of any former show. Word from officials of the Oregon State Horse and Cattle Raisers association which holds the annual convention here on the second and third of July is to the effect that the attendance of stock men at this year's convention will eclipse all former meetings.

You noticed in my ad that I have not said very much about bush liquor for the last few days. We were trying to sell it so down-right cheap that someone turned in a complaint and our company made so much fuss about it, as they wanted us to make full 40% on it and we didn't want to and in fact we don't think that you wanted us to; so consequently there was so much discussion over it we had to box it up and ship it back. We have been trying ever since to get in touch with a first-class liquor about half the price that you have been paying, but so far we have not succeeded. However, speaking in the terms of fishing, we have received several good strikes and it looks like we will be able to sell you some of the very best brush liquor for about 40% off the value. We will let you know how we succeed. We have gotten along so far through life and as we live just a day at a time, we trust we shall continue to live.

Don't forget the Red Top fencing. Remember our prices are below mail order. We have enough barb wire on hand to make a barb wire entanglement.

Monarch paint is still selling just as good as ever. Come and see some time and get acquainted.

his unusual fame when he swallowed a quantity of flukes, an intestinal parasite which claimed countless victims in China, in order to bring them alive to his country to be studied. In the article in the Digest, we read this: "Some years ago, Dr. C. H. Barlow was discharged from a sanitarium at Saranac Lake, New York, where he had been successfully treated for pulmonary tuberculosis, deliberately contracted in order to save a Chinese patient's life." This time he was working on the flukes but was limited because of lack of laboratory equipment. He determined to swallow the flukes and bring them alive, in his own body, the immigration laws making it impossible for him to bring in to this country the body of a sick Chinese. The venture was successful and the sharing of the man attracted world-wide attention.
