SEEK BIRTHPLACE IN FAR-OFF ASIA

Remnants of Every Day Life of Paleolithic Man Found

By Charles E. Harmer
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

CHICAGO (AP)—Back into the history of Turkey, enveloped and enmeshed in a tangle of Oriental mysticism, the historian probes his way toward the beginning of mankind.

But he stops short, 100 centuries before Christ was born. Before that he knows there was a paleolithic man—a man who lived in caves, ate raw or partially cooked meats and wooed his love with a club.

Now remnants of the every day life of that paleolithic man have been exhumed for the inspection of American scientists. Some of the skeletons of his descendants have been brought to Chicago.

This epoch making feat was accomplished by the Oriental institute of the University of Chicago, whose guiding power is Prof. James Henry Breasted.

In a mound near Alishar, an Anatolian village in the center of Asia Minor, a field expedition found 31 skeletons, the youngest of which is 33 centuries old, and many implements of peace and war. All are the last remains of the Hittite race, a people whose records until now have been a closed book in history.

The bulk of the relics which were unearthed have remained in Turkey. A small portion was presented by the Turkish government to the Haskell Oriental museum.

"We are not seeking more museum pieces," says Dr. Breasted. "What we seek is knowledge of the beginning of mankind.

"Photography and the draughtsman's art are preserving to posterity the meanings of the Hittite discoveries. To find knowledge we must study, not merely collect relics."

Into sun blistered wildernesses, noxious swamps breathing fever, and storms choking live things, crawled the battered, old, cheap car of the Haskell museum's expedition. Poorly cooked morsels of food and little drinking water were the lot of the occupants — three men and one woman.

With H. H. von der Osten, who led the first little expedition out of Constantinople, went his wife, not to enjoy a sight seeing trip, but to take charge of all the technical work, such as registering photographs and keeping the field book. As traveling companion there was a young engineering student, Shefket Hilmi Bey, of Robert college, Constantinople. He left the party at Samsuh and was succeeded by Nedjmedin Kadry Bey, a young railroad engineer. The Turkish chauffeur of the car was designated simply as Hussein.

They traveled deep into Asia Minor. Their painfully slow journey covered 4600 miles. And at last they found the land of the ancient Hittites—a legendary and mysterious lost tribe who "ruled the world" before 1200 B. C.

REPUBLICANS TO CONVENE ON TUESDAY

road caravan into Kansas City and the streets and hotel gathering places of convention visitors took on in constantly increasing measure the topsy-turvey characteristics that always accompany the four-year national jubilee of a great political party. From early morning the downtown convention section of the city was alive with a confusion of noise and color.

The weather alone was out of harmony with the usual convention picture, for the sweltering sunshine that proverbially enwraps convention cities was absent and unlamented.

Cool Breeze

A cool breeze played with the red, white and blue decorations under an overcast sky gently hinting of rain.

In the Hoover camp there was a new note of confidence as the Pennsylvania, specials sped westward. The word was passed about quietly that all was well; that advices of sufficient authenticity had preceded Mrs Mellon to Kansas City, and that the fight for Hoover was definitely won. Among many of the Hooverites there appeared a complete belief that Mellon in some way had been committed to Hoover—a report which the Lowden-Curtis-Watson-Goff coalition steadfastedly refused to accept.

Good is Confident

It also was whispered in the Hoover ranks that the activities of the past 24 hours had netted enough gains in other quarters to make Pennsylvania's support no longer absolutely essential to Hoover's nomination. Furthermore, the Hoover manager, James W. Good, assuming a boldness which has characterized none of his previous utterances, announced publicly that the Hoover strength would be held for Hoover and would not be thrown to President Coolidge in case Pennsylvania or anyone else started a stampede for a renomination.

But in spite of all this display of confidence, it was apparent enough that the Hoover leaders would undoubtedly give a large sigh of relief and a loud cheer if the Pennsylvania mystery were solved in their favor, and out of the way.

Allies Talk of Compromise

Among the allies who oppose Hoover there was much talk today of a compromise candidate. Senator Curtis, of Kansas, the last of the Lowden - Curtis-Watson-Goff quartette of Kansans to reach Kansas City, stedfastedly maintained that the logical man on whom a compromise should center was none other than Curtis himself.

Former Governor Lowden smilingly dismissed a question whether he still hoped to be the nominee. Senator Watson, of Indiana, quoted from the lore of Uncle Joe Cannon to say that so far as his chances were concerned, the party might go farther and do worse, and probably would.

Senator Goff said he had not abandoned hope.

Mention of Dawes

In other allied quarters there was mention of Vice President Dawes, General Pershing and others. But if any Hoover support was a party to compromise negotiations, he kept it quiet. The Hoover organization was driving along looking for victory.

Arrival yesterday of the big delegation from New York, whose leaders are holding out against the Hoover candidacy, did not appear to dampen the optimism of the Hoover managers. All aloing, Good and his lieutenants have predicted that when the time came, party officials in the empire state could not hold their lines, and that a majority of the New York 90 would go into the Hoover column.

The New Yorkers did bring to town the makings of a possible platform rumpus over prohibition, for Nicholas Murry Butler and others insisted they would not take without a fight the law enforcement plank said to have been drafted by Senator Borah, with the approval of the Hoover leaders.

First Ballot Thursday

Like the farm relief fight, any discussion over a prohibition plank seems likely to proceed quietly for a day or two. Both will get into the open by the middle of the week, however, with the convening of the platform committee, which is to be named after the convention has perfected a permanent organization, probably on Wednesday. Balloting for a presidential nominee probably will begin either on Thursday or Friday.

There was further evidence today that the farm relief disagreement was inextricably interwoven with the Hoover and anti-Hoover dispute.

Among the allied candidates, former Governor Lowden and Senator Watson in particular, both supporters of the McNary-Haugen bill, received an increasing number of newly arrived delegates and in addition to putting a word for the candidates coalition, urged their visitors to fight for a plank which would be recognize the principle of the equalization fee. At additional meetings throughout the city, delegates were solicited by [illegible] relay of speakers to oppose Hoover, and to support a farm relief policy satisfy to McNary-Haugen chantry.

ldge to the convention and there were no indications that he intended to participate in any of the pre-convention proceedings.

If the secretary has a message from the White House, he has made no arrangements for making it public.

OREGON HOLDS HARMONY MEET

KANSAS CITY, June 11 (AP)—After a day of hard activity in an effort to preserve harmony of the Oregon delegation through the stage of organization, the state's representatives to the republican national convention closed to a formal session today to put into effect the result of the preliminary discussions.

Coming to Kansas City in two groups, one of which arrived a day ahead of the other, the delegates found themselves with some lack of agreement as to how committee memberships and delegation officers should be handled.

Yesterday's activities on the part of individual delegates were for the purpose of reconciling any diverging views and reaching the most satisfactory adjustment possible. This was done, particularly because, backers wanted for harmony among party leaders in view of the state presidential contests next fall.

One feature of the proposed conciliation program was to offer Earl A. Kozer, secretary of state for the last eight years, his choice of delegation officers and committee assignments, because of the fact that he received the highest vote of any delegate in the presidential primary.

The delegation caucus took the form of a breakfast conference in the quarters of Ralph E. Williams, Oregon national committeeman, at the Meadlobrook hotel with the state's delegates present.

One of the most important places after the chairmanship was membership on the resolutions committee. Other selections included the delegation vice chairman, secretary and members of committees on credentials, rules and order of business, permanent organization and to notify the [illegible] and vice presidential nominees.

Oregon's delegation almost redoubled by a declaration of a dozen republicans to occupy alternate seats provided in the convention hall. They include Governor and Mrs. I. L. Patterson, Representative Franklin Correll of the third Oregon district; John Ivey, Multnomah county republican chairman who will place in nomination the state's vice presidential nominee, Charles H. Hall, Mrs. Walter Reuter, La Grander Mrs. Charles E. Runyan, Portland; S. A. Smith, Medford; J. U. [illegible] and Mrs. Thomas Sawyer, Portland and William Burchardt, Salem.

The Oregon contingent, in the convention hall is expected to be swelled still further by admittance of some other residents of the state on guest tickets at the disposal of party leaders.

Runs in Indiana

Harry G. Leslie, former Purdue University baseball and football star (1903) and more recently speaker of the Indiana House of Representatives, has been nominated as the Republican candidate for governor. He is a lawyer, farmer and alumni secretary of Purdue.

Seattle Grain Rate Hearing Is Nearing An End

SEATTLE, Wash., June 11 (AP)—A determined and three-fold offensive upon the existing grain rate structure of northwestern railroads was to begin in real earnest today when the interstate commerce commission's grain rate hearing resumed for the week—the last week, it was predicted, on the Seattle hearing.

The attack upon the present tariffs were indicated by three widely separated groups of interest.

Inland Empire farmers who began presentation of their case by asking for the "lowest possible rates" on grain from eastern Washington and Northern Idaho to the Pacific coast.

Minnesota milling interests, who desire eastbound rates from Montana comparable with the westbound export rates.

The railroad themselves who indicated that they would in all probability line up with the Minnesota millers to do away with the special westbound export rates, rather than grant lower eastbound rates.

The strategy of the Minnesota interest in presenting a choice between lower easternbound rates from Montana or the preservation of the present westbound rates in the belief of Portland and Seattle attorneys, was intended to win the railroads' support for Minnesota in the fight between Pacific coast and Minnesota mills for 20,000,000 bushels of Montana wheat.
