Customer: "Ough! This towel is scalding hot."

Barber: "Sorry, sir! I couldn't hold it any longer."

The kitchenette demonstrator wanted to call the next day.

"That's my busy day," said Mrs. Jordan. "I usually have so much to do that you would probably find me in a whirligig."

"Oh, that's all right, madam," the demonstrator replied: "Im used to seeing housewives in their kimonas."

Bachelor: "Sometimes I yearn for the peace and comfort of married life."

Married Friend: "I always do."

Grocer: Yes, lady, these eggs are fresh from the country.

Suspicious Customer: What country?

"Could you give a poor fellow a bite?" said the dust-stained tramp.

"I don't bite, myself," answered the lady of the house, "but I'll call the dog."

AT THE THEATERS

Hilarious Fun In "Chicken a la King" Film

What would you think if a woman, to whom you had been married for 25 years, suddenly blossomed out in the gorgeous raiment that you had presented to another woman?

This is one of the many hilarious situations in Fox films' "Chicken a La King" which opens at the Star theater today.

The story concerns a middle aged married man who strays from his cosy fireside and becomes a leading figure in the night life of New York. He becomes interested in a burlesque girl who has an idea that the correct world would suffer a loss unless she receives immediate voice culture.

With the aid of a girl chum, she makes a play for his favors and is installed in a magnificent apartment with the best vocal teachers at her disposal.

However, friend wife gets wind of his generosity and in a novel manner receives the benefits of his largess and brings him back to the fold, very much crestfallen.

Nancy Carrol, vivacious little blonde, enacts the designing burlesque girl, and Ford Sterling the good samaritan. The others are George Meeker, Arthur Stone, Carol Holloway and Frances Lee. The direction is by Henry Lehrman.

Miss Talmadge In Colorful Role At Arcade

Norma Talmadge officially becomes a United Artist with release of her new picture, "The Dove," which is now playing at the Arcade theater. In her debut as a United Artist, her role is that of Dolores Romero, a heroine of many moods.

"The Dove" has been directed by Roland West, who made "The Bat," and is known for original ideas in directing. West believes that closeups can legitimately be used in pictures as doctors use X-rays. A doctor must clearly see the subject in whom he is interested. So the audience must be able to see just as clearly the character which is being revealed in a story.

In pictures, the closeup, according to West, should be used psychologically. It is highly inartistic to use it merely to exploit a star's prettiest moments. It is a much more precious means whereby to show the measure of the star's feelings under any set of dramatic circumstances.

Roland West declares, "I have no quarrel with the critics who object to the promiscuous employment of the close-to-the-camera action in motion pictures, but I do insist that it is impossible to tell a screen story convincingly without intimate shots of the leading players.

"Since we cannot photograph thought, we must photograph the expression of thought, and the only way we can do it effectively is by bringing the camera close to the face of the characters. Closeups tell the audience the story; long-range photography is merely incidental.

"However, the closeup is like the unusual camera angle. Unless each really means something in the development of the plot, it might as well be left out. Punctuating a picture with a hodgepodge of closeups and trick shots is only to incearse the dramatic is only to increase the daramtic effect that a director should use the close-up or the novel camera angle."

And Roland West, having expressed these theories, followed them in directing "The Dove."

Thrills And Comedy in Tom Mix Picture

Again Tom Mix scores a triumph with a thrilling romantic drama of the West, "Daredevil's Reward," which has its first showing at the Colonial theater today.

Some new stunts in daring riding as well as an unusually fine story shot with many laughter provoking episodes make this latest Fox feature an outstanding entertainment.

Mix is cast in the role of a Texas Ranger detective and as such assumes various disguises but all of western types. One of these is that of a doctor of a medicine show, who is forced against his better judgment to pull a tooth for one of the men he is trailing. Tom pulls the wrong tooth and then the fun commences.

Natalie Joyce has the leading feminine role and gives a splendid performance. Others in the cast are Lawford Davidson, Billy Bletcher, Harry Cording and William Welsh.

The story and scenario are by John Stone who wrote the tale especially for Mix and Tony. Gene Forde is the director of this, probably the best picture in which the Western Ace has yet appeared.
