A VACATION PRESCRIPTION

When you're itching for a vacation trip and the ol' bus is all set to do her stuff on a few Oregon highways—and you've done your duty to Eastern Oregon's own playground in the Wallowa—there's no more beautiful and satisfying journey than that which has Crater lake as its goal. The highways either through central Oregon and in the Klamath entrance or over the Old Oregon Trail to Portland and through the Willamette valley to the Medford gateway are practically perfect, a comfortable two-day trip by the former route.

At the lake the scenery, the water, the accommodations, the climate are all that you expected—and more. Numerous Eastern Oregon people can testify to that. Some of them saw Crater Lake in the days when one reached it only on horseback; some went in during the area's first years as a national park. Others have traveled the broad, smooth highway as it is today. And all are enthusiastic.

It's impossible to describe the lake and its magnificent surroundings. Pictures fail to do it justice. But it is properly known as one of the most remarkable scenic wonders on the Pacific coast. It's therefore a notable asset for Oregon, an attraction that brings thousands of tourists to the state each year, that will bring increasing thousands in years to come. Last year, for example, there were 87,000 people visited Crater lake. In 1920 there were less than 20,000, which indicates how a scenic wonder may grow in popularity.

One of the most important factors in making Crater lake popular for motor and rail tourists alike is the Lodge built atop the rim. During the last month Mr. Price, its manager, has had many complimentary things said of him, his hotel, and his hospitality. But none of them could be classified as unwarranted. It's an ideal place in which to stop. Accommodations are good. Meals are too good. The menus too easily destroy one's determination to keep an athletic figure. A good appetite is one thing every visitor needs. The whole atmosphere is pleasant, congenial, restful. It's the kind of resort hotel one wants but seldom finds.

Failure to mention the service at the Lodge, and those who provide it in such large and efficient measure, when speaking of Crater lake would be an undeserved slight. University of Oregon students, boys and girls, care for every need. Girls handle the dining room and lobby stands. Boys handle the baggage, keep the big fire-place blazing, do the "chores." And a courteous, well trained lot they are. A staff of 65 people is maintained at the Lodge throughout the season.

Incidentally it is well to state that this National Park company operating at our own Crater lake was reported to the Department of Interior last year as the most efficiently run in the United States. Mr. Price has another achievement to his credit. The government conducted a survey of bookkeeping systems in the various national parks and after more than a year of study their auditors approved the Crater Lake Lodge's system and had it adopted in all other parks in the country. That is additional evidence of good management.

Much has been and much more could be written about Crater lake and its charm for those who enjoy the unusual, the magnificent in nature, but the significant thing to most residents of Eastern Oregon who visit it is that Crater lake offers little if anything more to the vacationist and tourist than the lake basin of the Wallowa. As one sees the excellent and thoroughly satisfying way in which the Crater Lake area is capitalized, and contemplates the value of a park and playground that will draw nearly ninety thousand people to it in a short summer season, the eventual possibilities of the Wallowa lakes and mountains is doubly impressive.

The Wallowa basin is not more inaccessible than Crater lake was originally. Though farther from Pacific Coast centers of population, it could be equally well known, equally popular. Even Wallowa lake, which is just beginning when considering the scenic beauties of the whole region, is more and more sought out by tourists. Accommodations of the best class are already inadequate to meet the demand. With these properly provided and with the lakes of the basin made more accessible in some feasible way, the possibilities are unlimited. A playground that would attract 87,000 visitors in less than three months is a resource worth more rapid development.

HE GIVES UP

I think that I undertook too much.
When I raised the Irish and the Dutch;
And then with grateful heart gave thanks
To those Australians and those Yanks.

Now the fliers of all lands and climes,
Try my patience and exhaust my rhymes.
From the North Pole down to Mexico,
They outdo the eagle and the crow.

Most of them succeed while a few fail—
But how can I comment on them all?
So to all of them my hat I doff,
And simply call the whole thing off. —J. H. Blumenstein.

Dear Friends. Don't overlook the fact that we are having a paint sale. It started this morning at 8 o'clock and will last until next Saturday evening at 6 o'clock. To make it interesting we are going to sell to the first customers next Monday morning some beautiful pictures frames with the glass and pictures already in them. You can take the picture that is in them now, out, and put the picture of yourself or your pet dog in each frame at 10c apiece. Some of the glass itself is worth ten times that amount.

Then we have several hundred rolls of remnant wallpaper for just 1c a roll. You can put it under carpets, you can use it underneath siding, you can paper a room to kalsomine over it and a lot of things and we want you to watch our ad every day because we are going to offer you some of the craziest inducements you ever heard of. In fact, even Monday we will sell 6 gallon of job lot paint for just $1.00 a gallon, and wallpaper. As I said before, just watch our ad. We are having a clean-up week. If you want to clean up some real savings, we have got something here for you. And what I say to one I say unto all—

Stock Exchange Dull, Irregular As Week Closes

NEW YORK, July 21 (AP)—Extreme dullness characterized today's brief session of the stock market. Price movements again were indecisive, due to the failure of pools to attract an outside following and the absence of any concerted selling pressure.

The optimistic tenor of weekly trade reviews were offset by fears of further credit stringency when the remaining federal reserve banks raise their rediscount rates to five per cent and banks are called upon to finance the fall movement of crops.

Resumption of bullish operations in Warner Bros. Pictures carried that stock to a new high of 57½, which contrasted with the year's low of 22. A good demand also was noticed for such issues as Lefin and Fink, Eastman Kodak, Columbia Gas, Lambert, Kroger Stores, International Telephone and Mexican Seaboard.

Profit-taking brought about substantial reductions in such recent favorites as Union Carbide, Radio, Montgomery Ward and General Motors.

The closing was irregular. Total sales were approximately 520,000 shares.
